THE LIONS OF THE LORD

A TALE OF THE OLD WEST

BY HARRY LEON WILSON, AUTHOR OF THE SPENDERS

COPYRIGHT 1903 BY LOTHROP PUBLISHING COMPANY

He was still uneasy, hesitating, fearful, but he saw interest here and there in the faces before him. Even Brigham, though unseen by the speaker, was looking mildly curious.

"You remember the revelation that came to Joseph in an early day when there was trouble in raising money to print the Book of Mormon,—'Some revelations are from God, some from man, and some from the Devil.' Recalling the many chastenings God has put upon us, may we not have failed to test all our other revelations by this one?"

Deep within he was angry at himself, for he was not speaking with words of fire as he had meant to; he was feeling a shameful cowardice in the presence of the Prophet. He had seen himself once more the Lute of the Holy Ghost, strong and moving; but now he was a poor, low-spoken, hesitating rambler. Nervously he went on, skirting about the edge of his truth as long as he dared, but feeling at last that he must plunge into its icy depths.

"In short, brethren, the Book of Mormon denounces and forbids our plural marriages."

Even this astounding declaration he made without warmth, in tones so low that many did not hear him. Those on the platform heard, however, and now began to view his obvious physical weakness in a new light. Yet he continued, gaining a little in force.

"The declarations on the subject in the Book of Mormon are so worded that we cannot fail to read them as denouncing and forbidding the practice of the Old Testament patriarchs in the matter of the family life."

In rapid succession he cited the passages to which he referred, those concerning David and Solomon and Noah and Riplakish, who 'did not do that which was right in the sight of the Lord, for he did have many wives.'"

There were murmurings and rustlings among the people now, and on his right he heard Brigham stirring uneasily in his chair; but he nerved himself to keep on his feet, feeling he had that to say which should make them hail him as a new prophet when he was understood.

"But besides these warnings against the sin there are many early revelations to Joseph himself condemning it."

He cited several of these, feeling the amazement and the alarm grow about him.

"And now against these plain words, given at many times in many places, written on the golden plates in letters that cannot lie, or brought to Joseph by the angel of the Lord, we have only the one revelation on celestial marriage. Read it now in the light of these other revelations and see if it does not too plainly convict itself of having been counterfeited to Joseph by an evil spirit. Such, brethren, has been the revelation that the Lord has given to me again and again until it burns within me, and I must cry it out to you. Try to receive it from me."

There was commotion among the people in front, chairs were moved at one side, and a low voice called to him to sit down. He heard this voice through the ringing that had been in his ears for many days, like the beating of a sea against him, and he felt the strength go suddenly from his knees.

He stumbled weakly back to his chair and sank into it with head bowed, feeling, rather than seeing, the figure of Brigham rise from its seat and step forward with deliberate, unruffled majesty.

As the Prophet faced his people they became quite silent, so that the robins could be heard in the Pettigrew peach trees across the street. He poured a glass of water from the pitcher on the table, and drank it slowly. Then, leaning a little forward, resting both his big cushiony hands on the green of the table, the Lion of the Lord began to roar—very softly at first. Slowly the words came, in tones scarce audible, marked indeed almost by the hesitation of the first speaker. But then a difference showed; gradually the tone increased in volume, the words came faster, fluency succeeding hesitation, and now his voice was high and searching, while his easy, masterful gestures laid their old spell upon the people.

"It does not occupy my feelings to curse any individual," he had begun, awkwardly; "in fact, I feel to render all thanks and praise for the discourse to which we have just listened, but I couldn't help saying to myself, 'Oh, dear, Granny! what a long tail our puss has got!'"

An uneasy titter came from the packed square of faces in front of him. He went on with rising power:

"But it is foretold in the Book of Mormon that the Lord will remove the bitter branches, and it's a good thing to find out where the bitter branches are. We can remove them ourselves. We can't expect the Lord to do all our dirty work. Now hear it once more, you that need to hear it—and damn all such poor pussyism as sniffles and whines and rejects it! We don't want that scrubby breed here!—Listen, I say. The celestial order of marriage is necessary for our exaltation to the fulness of the Lord's glory in the world eternal! Where much is given much is required. Understand me,—those that reject polygamy will be damned. Hear it now once for all. I will give you to know that God, our Father, has many wives, and so has Jesus Christ, our Elder Brother. Our God and Father in heaven is a being of tabernacle, or, in other words, He has a body of parts the same as you and I have. And that God and Father of ours was Adam."

Again there was a stirring below as if a wind swept the people, and the little man in his chair cowered for shame of himself. He had meant to do a great thing; he had thrilled so strongly with it; it had promised to master others as it had mastered him; and now he was shamed by the one true Lion of the Lord.

"Hear it now," continued Brigham. "When God, our Father Adam, came into the garden of Eden, he came into it with a celestial body, and brought one of his wives with him,—Eve. He made and organized this world. He is Michael, the Archangel, the Ancient of Days, about whom holy men have written and spoken. He is our Father and our God, and the only God with whom we have to do. I could tell you much more about this; but were I to tell you the whole truth, blasphemy would be nothing to it, in the estimation of the superstitious and over-righteous of mankind. But I will tell you this, that Jesus, our Elder Brother, was begotten in the flesh by the same character that was in the garden of Eden, and who is our Father in Heaven."

"O God, I Am Tired and Ready! Take Me and Burn Me!"

He turned and went to his seat with a last threatening gesture, amid many little sounds of people relaxing from strained positions.

But then, before another could arise, a wonder came upon them. The little man stood up and came quickly forward, a strange new life in his step, a new confidence in his bearing, a curious glow of new strength in his face. Even his stoop had straightened for the moment. For, as he had listened to Brigham's last words, the picture of his vision in the desert had come back,—the cross in the sky, the crucified Savior upon it, the head in death-agony fallen over upon the shoulder. And then before his eyes had come page after page of the New Testament with a wash of blood across two of them. He felt the new life he had prayed for pouring into his veins, and with it a fierce anger. The one on the cross who had been more than man, who had shirked no sacrifice and loved infinitely, was not thus to be assailed. A panorama of wrong—wrong thinking and wrong doing—extended before his clearing gaze. For once he seemed to see truth in a vision and to feel the power to utter it.

There was silence again as he stood in front of the little table, the faces before him frozen into wonder that he should have either the power or the temerity to answer Brigham. He spoke, and his voice was again rough with force, and high and fearless, a voice many of them recalled from the days when he had not been weak.

"Now I see what we have done. Listen, brethren, for God has not before so plainly said it to any man, and I know my time is short among you. We have gone back to the ages of Hebrew barbarism for our God—to the God of Battles worshipped by a heathen people—a God who loved the reek of blood and the smell of burning flesh. But you shall not—"

He turned squarely and fiercely to the face of Brigham.

"—you shall not confuse that bloody God of Battles with the true Christ, nor yet with the true God of Love that this Christ came to tell us of. Once I believed in Him. I was taught to by your priests. War seemed a righteous thing, for we had been grievously put upon, and I believed the God of Israel should avenge our wrongs as He had avenged those of His older Zion. And hear me now—so long as I believed this, I was no coward; while you, sir—"

A long forefinger was pointed straight at the amazed Brigham.

"—while you, sir, were a craven, contemptible in your cowardice. I would have fought in Echo canyon to the end, because I believed. But you did not believe, and so you were afraid to fight. And for your cowardice and your wretched lusts your name among all but your ignorant dupes shall become a hissing and a scorn. For mark it well, unless you forsake that heathen God of Battles and preach the divine Christ of the New Testament, you shall come to hold only the ignorant, and them only by keeping them ignorant."

The commotion among the people in front was now all but a panic. On the platform the sires of Israel whispered one to another, while Brigham gazed as if fascinated, driven to admiration for the speaker's power and audacity. For the feverish, fleeting moment, Joel Rae was that veritable Lion of the Lord he had prayed to be, putting upon the people his spell of the old days. Heads were again strained up and forward, and amazed horror was on most of the faces. Far back, Prudence trembled, feeling that she must be away at once, until she felt the firm grasp of Follett's hand. The speaker went on, having turned again to the front.

"Instead of a church you shall become justly hated and despised as a people who foul their homes and dishonor beyond forgiveness the names of wife and mother. Then your punishment shall come upon you as it has already come for this and for other sins. Even now the Gentile is upon us; and mark this truth that God has but now given me to know: we have never been persecuted as a church,—but always as a political body hostile to the government of this nation. Even so, you had no faith. Believing as I believed, I would have fought that nation and died a thousand bloody deaths rather than submit. But you had no faith, and you were so low that you let yourselves be ruled by a coward—and I tell you God hates a coward."

He stopped, waiting as if he were not done, but the spell was broken. The life, indeed, had in the later moments been slowly dying from his words; and, as they lost their fire, scattered voices of protest had been heard; then voices in warning from behind him, and the sound of two or three rising and pushing back their chairs.

The little bent man tried again to smile, hoping for a friendly glance, perhaps a hand-clasp without words from some one of them. Seeing that he was shunned, he stepped down off the platform at the side, twisting his hat in his long, thin hands in embarrassment. A moment he stood so, turning to look back at the group of priests and Elders around the Prophet, seeking for any sign, even for a glance that should be not unkind. The little pained smile still lighted his face, but no friendly look came from the others. Seeing only the backs turned toward him, he at length straightened out his crumpled hat, still smiling, and slowly put it on his head; as he turned away he pulled the hat farther over his eyes, and then he was off along the dusty street, looking to neither side, still with the little smile that made his face gentle.

But when he had come to the end of the street and was on the road up the hill, the smile died. He seemed all at once to shrink and stoop and fade, —no longer a Lion of the Lord, but a poor, white-faced, horrified little man who had meant in his heart to give a great revelation, and who had succeeded only in uttering blasphemy to the very face of God's prophet.

From below, the little groups of excited people along the street looked up and saw his thin, bent figure alone in the fading sunlight, toiling resolutely upward.

Other groups back in the square talked among themselves, not a few in whispers. A listener among them might have heard such expressions as, "He'll be blood-atoned sure!"—"They'll make a breach upon him!"—"They'll accomplish his decease!"—"He'll be sent over the rim of the basin right quick!" One indignant Saint, with a talent for euphemism, was heard to say, "Brigham will have his spirit disembodied!"

To the priests and Elders on the platform Elder Wardle was saying, "The trouble with him was he was crazy with fever. Why, I'll bet my best set of harness his pulse ain't less than a hundred and twenty this minute."

The others looked at Brigham.

"He's a crazy man, sure enough," assented the Prophet, "but my opinion is he'll stay crazy, and it wouldn't be just the right thing by Israel to let him go on talking before strangers. You see, it sounds so almighty sane!"

Back in the crowd Prudence and Follett had lingered a little at the latter's suggestion, for he had caught the drift of the talk. When he had comprehended its meaning they set off up the hill, full of alarm.

At the door Christina met them. They saw she had been crying.

"Where is father, Christina?"

"Himself saddle his horse, and say, 'I go to see some of those marks.' He say, 'I see you plenty not no more, so good-bye!' He kissed me," she added.

"Which way did he go?"

"So!" She pointed toward the road that led out of the valley to the north.

"I'll go after him," said Follett.

"I'll go with you. Saddle Dandy and Kit—and Christina will have something for you to eat; you've had nothing since morning."

"I reckon I know where we'll have to go," said Follett, as he went for the saddles.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

The Little Bent Man at the Foot of the Cross.

It was dusk when they rode down the hill together. They followed the canyon road to its meeting with the main highway at the northern edge of Amalon. Where the roads joined they passed Bishop Wright, who, with his hat off, turned to stare at them, and to pull at his fringe of whisker in seeming perplexity.

"He must have been on his way to our house," Prudence called.

"With that hair and whiskers," answered Follett, with some irrelevance, "he looks like an old buffalo bull just before shedding time."

They rode fast until the night fell, scanning the road ahead for a figure on horseback. When it was quite dark they halted.

"We might pass him," suggested Follett. "He was fairly tuckered out, and he might fall off any minute."

Down out of Pine valley they went, and over more miles of gray alkali toward a line of hills low and black in the north.

They came to these, followed the road out of the desert through a narrow gap, and passed into the Mountain meadows, reining in their horses as they did so.

Before them the meadows stretched between two ranges of low, rocky hills, narrow at first but widening gradually from the gap through which they had come. But the ground where the long, rich grass had once grown was now barren, gray and ugly in the moonlight, cut into deep gullies and naked of all but a scant growth of sage brush which the moon was silvering, and a few clumps of shadowy scrub oak along the base of the hills on either side.

Instinctively they stopped, speaking in low tones. And then there came to them out of the night's silence a strange, weird beating; hollow, muffled, slow, and rhythmic, but penetrating and curiously exciting, like another pulse cunningly playing upon their own to make them beat more rapidly. The girl pulled her horse close in by his, but he reassured her.

"It's Indians—they must be holding the funeral of some chief. But no matter—these Indians aren't any more account than prairie dogs."

They rode on slowly, the funeral drum sounding nearer as they went.

Then far up the meadow by the roadside they could see the hard, square lines of the cross in the moonlight. Slower still they went, while the drum beats became louder, until they seemed to fall upon their own eardrums.

"Could he have come to this dreadful place?" she asked, almost in a whisper.

"We haven't passed him, that's sure; and I've got a notion he lied. I've heard him talk about this cross off and on—it's been a good deal in his mind—and maybe he was a little out of his head. But we'll soon see."

They walked their horses up a little ascent, and the cross stood out more clearly against the sky. They approached it slowly, leaning forward to peer all about it; but the shadows lay heavy at its base, and from a little distance they could distinguish no outline.

But at last they were close by and could pierce the gloom, and there at the foot of the cross, beside the cairn of stones that helped to support it, was a little huddled bit of blackness. It moved as they looked, and they knew the voice that came from it.

"Oh God, I am tired and ready! Take me and burn me!"

She was off her horse and quickly at his side. Follett, to let them be alone, led the horses to the spring below. It was almost gone now, only the feeblest trickle of a rivulet remaining. The once green meadows had behaved, indeed, as if a curse were put upon them. Hardly had grass grown or water run through it since the day that Israel wrought there. When he had tied the horses he heard Prudence calling him.

"I'm afraid he's delirious,' she said, when he reached her side. "He keeps hearing cries and shots, and sees a woman's hair waving before him, and he's afraid of something back of him. What can we do?"

At the foot of the cross the little man was again sounding his endless prayer.

"Bow me, bend me, break me, for I have been soul-proud. Burn me out—"

She knelt by his side, trying to sooth him.

"Father—it's all right—it's Prudence—"

But at her name he uttered a cry with such terror in it that she shuddered and was still. Then he began to mutter incoherently, and she heard her own name repeated many times.

"If that awful beating would only stop," she said to Follett, who had now brought water in the curled brim of his hat. She tried to have the little man drink. He swallowed some of the water from the hat brim, shivering as he did so.

"We ought to have a fire," she said. Follett began to gather twigs and sage brush, and presently had a blaze in front of them.

SAHARA GROWING DRYER.

French Observer Says the Oases Are Shrinking and Will Disappear.

C. F. Gautier, a French explorer, is authority for the statement that the Sahara is continuously becoming drier to such an extent that the oases are perceptibly drying up and will disappear altogether in a relatively short time. He quotes historic records and physical signs to show that springs were at one time more plentiful than now, and that the extent of the patches where vegetation flourishes were much greater even 50 to 100 years ago.

As the climate of the region has undergone no change in perhaps thousands of years, he believes that the disappearance of the water must be due to purely mechanical causes. He considers that it is due to the continual advance of the great sand masses to the north, thus forming an impenetrable barrier against the watershed of the Atlas mountains.—N. Y. Sun.

BABY ITCHED TERRIBLY.

Face and Neck Covered with Inflamed Skin—Doctors No Avail—Cured by Cuticura Remedies.

"My baby's face and neck were covered with itching skin similar to eczema, and she suffered terribly for over a year. I took her to a number of doctors, and also to different colleges, to no avail. Then Cuticura Remedies were recommended to me by Miss G—. I did not use it at first, as I had tried so many other remedies without any favorable results. At last I tried Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Resolvent Pills, and to my surprise noticed an improvement. After using three boxes of the Cuticura Ointment, together with the Soap and Pills, I am pleased to say she is altogether a different child and the picture of health. Mrs. A. C. Brestlin, 171 N. Lincoln St., Chicago, Ill., Oct. 20 and 30, 1906."

Ghosts of Dead Lakes.

In the great basin between the Rockies and the Sierra Nevadas lie the ghosts of many dead lakes. Rivers still flow down to the dry edge of these one-time great reservoirs and are licked up by evaporation and the chinook winds. Of all the lakes that once lay there, only Great Salt Lake, Lake Tahoe and Bear Lake are left. The Southern Pacific rolls for 165 miles across the bed of what was once Lake Lahontan, and the passengers gazing idly from the windows may see the terraces and wrinkles in the crust of the fossil lake which nature robbed and defrauded of its crystal treasures ages ago.—Exchange.

All Misfortune.

"Pop," said Farmer Korntop's little boy, "what does it mean when you say 'misfortunes never come singly?'" "Wal," replied Farmer Korntop, "that's just about the truth. First comes a wet spell that'll spile the tomatoes an' then comes a dry spell that spiles everything else."

A Counter Irritant.

"Have you made arrangements to prevent fraud in the election?" "No," answered Senator Sorgbum; "I couldn't quite manage that. But I've done the next best thing to defeat the opposition's iniquity. CURING DISTEMPER.

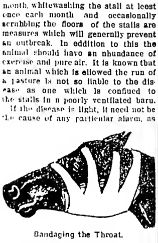
How This Infectious Disease Should Be Dealt With.

Distemper is an infectious disease and can be prevented if the quarters are kept free from the infection. Washing the trough with soft soap suds or carbolic acid solution twice each month, whitewashing the stall at least once each month and occasionally scrubbing the floors of the stalls are measures which will generally prevent an outbreak. In addition to this the animal should have an abundance of exercise and pure air. It is known that an animal which is allowed the run of a pasture is not so liable to the disease as one which is confined to the stalls in a poorly ventilated barn.

If the disease is light, it need not be the cause of any particular alarm, as it will be a benefit rather than a detriment. Colts which have it are generally immune thereafter. If there is a serious outbreak, the best remedy is to apply salve or poultices to the affected parts. One of the best salve mixtures is olive oil, four parts and acetic acid, one part. Bathe the swollen parts freely twice each day with this mixture. As a poultice, nothing is better than hot bran, using about a half gallon of the bran for each horse. To this should be added two tablespoonfuls of the following mixture: Neatsfoot oil, one quart; spirits of camphor, eight ounces; pulverized mustard, six ounces.



Bandaging the Throat.

The illustration accompanying this article shows how the bandage should be fastened on the head. Take a common grain sack and cut the ends into four strips, but leave the middle of the sack whole.

Place the poultice on a white cloth under the swollen part, then under it place the whole part of the sack, says Journal of Agriculture. Securely sew the ends of the strips together over the top of the head, allowing one band to rest in front of the eyes, another between the eyes and ears and the remaining two over the neck back of the ears.

One fourth of a pint of Glauber salts may be administered twice each day in the soft feed. If there is a great deal of fever, give a half teaspoonful of iodide of potash once each day in the food.

GENERAL PURPOSE HORSE.

Best Results Obtained from Medium Weight Animals.

I get the best results from horses weighing 1,200 to 1,300 pounds, writes a farmer in Orange Judd Farmer. These horses are used for general purposes. They must have good action, be compactly built, something on the old Morgan type, but a little larger. Such horses are large enough to haul a reasonable load and can do a good day's work on the average farm. They are useful on the road for light work. The most useful horses for my general work are good, snappy creatures.

I have but little trouble in breaking our colts, as we treat them kindly, handling them considerably while they are young. We never have any trouble with them when they are old enough to break. I believe in giving good care to colts as well as work horses. In my experience, a horse not properly cared for as a colt does not develop as early as one that receives proper attention. Horses should also be housed in bad weather. I believe in giving plenty of good, wholesome food. Horses should have special attention, and the man who succeeds is the one who keeps a close eye on the individuals.

Individual Hog Houses.

The folly of keeping a large number of hogs in a small inclosure is shown by the unusual fatality this season. The old notion that hogs could take most any sort of treatment has been responsible for heavy losses this season. Hogs are subject to colds and lung troubles. Whenever we permit them to crowd into tight sheds, in large numbers, we are inviting such calamity. The sensible way to house either hogs or the breeding sows, is to build small houses and scatter them about the fields. With farrowing sows, each one should be provided with an individual house, but with the other hogs six or eight can bunk in one of these houses very nicely. Build a half-dozen or more and try them.

Don't Crowd the Sheep.

Those who keep sheep, and especially beginners, should be careful not to house them too closely. The chief protection that the mature sheep wants is from winds and falling storms. Give them such protection and a dry bed and from choice they will usually prefer to lie in the yard, unless they have been accustomed to lie within by shutting them in at night.

PIG RATIONS AND RESULTS.

What Has Been Determined by Experiments in Connecticut.

The Storrs agricultural experiment station of Connecticut gives in bulletin 43 the following conclusions on pig feeding rations:

The pig among farm animals is noted for his great capacity for assimilation. But with the animal the economy of gain is greatly affected by the character of the ration.

One lot of three pigs required 2,739 pounds of skim milk containing 230 digestible nutrients for 100 pounds of gain. Eight lots, of 28 pigs required 1,086 pounds of skim milk and 253 of shorts, containing 258 pounds of digestible nutrients, for 100 pounds of gain. And one lot of three pigs required 445 pounds of shorts containing 294 pounds of digestible nutrients for 100 pounds of gain.

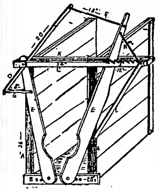
Milk is an easily digestible food. When fed alone in the above trials, 100 pounds of gain were made from the least amount (230 pounds) of digestible nutrients. When shorts were substituted for a portion of skim milk, more nutrients (258 pounds) were required for 100 pounds gain in weight. When shorts were fed alone the most nutrients (294 pounds) were required for the same gain.

The reader should bear in mind that the financial problem is not here considered. It is admitted that while skim milk is easily digested, it is too bulky in character. The capacity of the pig to digest and assimilate is greater than its capacity to consume this watery fluid. At ordinary market prices, a pound of digestible nutrients would cost twice as much in skim milk as in shorts. Experience shows that from a financial standpoint, the most economical gains are made when skim milk and grain are fed in the proportion of three-fourths to one. But the trials show, from a physiological standpoint, that less nutrients are required for a given gain when the ration consists of easily digested foods. The conclusion seems warranted that the food requirements for maintenance and for production (milk or growth) depends not only upon the composition and digestibility of a ration but also upon the facility with which it is digested and assimilated.

BOX FOR RINGING HOGS.

Device Which Will Hold Them Securely Down During Operation.

Herewith I submit a sketch of a hog ringing box which I have found to be very successful, writes a correspondent of Prairie Farmer. ACA represents the end of the box, four feet long, 28 inches wide and 36 inches high with the boards nailed on the inside. Two-by-fours make the frame, being bolted together. EE are pieces 1x8 bolted to B, which has several holes so that EE can be changed to suit the size of the hog when necessary. F is a rod 18 inches long and attached by a bolt to the upper end of D and E.G. is a rod bolted to each side of the lower end of D and the upper portion of E. H is a piece of iron eight inches long, made to work in the notches at I which are protected by properly made iron attached to the right end of CC and K are two pieces with a space between for EE to work in as illustrated in the cut. L is a brace to hold the upper works firm to the box.



The Box Complete.

The cut shows the box ready for the hog to enter from the rear and be held by EE. As soon as the rings have been inserted the clamp may be released and the hog allowed to go. The operator is then ready for the next one. This box should have guide fences at the rear, so the hogs can be driven in with as little excitement as possible.

STOCK NOTES.

Broken colts are less valuable than trained ones. Note the difference.

It is not what horses are worth now, but what they are likely to be worth four years from now that should regulate the number of colts to be raised next year.

It is almost impossible to destroy hen lice when they once get a start on the horse. Horses should not be quartered near a hen house, nor should chickens be allowed to roost over the horse's stall.

It has been said that there is not a section of the country where a leguminous crop cannot be raised or where a domestic animal cannot be kept to eat the legume. The live stock belt is as wide and long as the nation.

There is one horse to each family in the United States. In other words, there are enough horses in the nation, if each one were hitched to a double seated surry and five people were put in each surry, to haul the population of the country.

THE NEW INSURANCE AGENT.

He Comes In With the New Law—Paul Morton on His Opportunity.

The new insurance law of the State of New York has opened up a promising field for both men and women with brains and energy in the sale of life insurance. The law now provides standard forms of policies, each of which practically bears the hall mark of the State of New York, and this new order of things has established the sale of life insurance on a correct basis.

The prohibition against rebating and extravagant allowances to agents has driven out of the business the old type of insurance agent, who in many cases virtually bought business, with large rebates, instead of selling it. His place is being taken by professors, lawyers, school teachers of both sexes, and others, who find that being a life insurance agent under the new system offers greater reward than their previous vocations. The law has reduced commissions but all of the commission now goes to the agent. Life insurance is something that everyone needs and under the present system its sale is being conducted with becoming dignity and propriety.

Paul Morton, president of the Equitable Life Assurance Society, has taken the lead in building up an agency organization that is in keeping with the demands of public sentiment, and the standard he has set for his company. He says: "We want new agents, both men and women, but none except energetic, able and truthful people need apply. For such there is a splendid opportunity."

Mr. Morton's policy of injecting new and vigorous blood into the agency force of the Society is meeting with success in all parts of the country.

WORK OF TRUE GENIUS.

Rivers' Ingeniously Baited Trap Was Worthy of Success.

Rivers was sitting at his desk, with an unfinished page of manuscript before him, deeply absorbed in thought.

Brooks entered the room.

"What's the matter, old chap?" asked Brooks.

Rivers looked up with a heavy smile.

"I am struggling with a conundrum," he said.

"Let's have it."

"It isn't finished yet."

"How far have you got?"

"All I've written is the answer: 'One is a planked shed, and the other is a plaided shank.' I've got to have a question for it."

"That's easy. All you need is something Scotch, isn't it?"

"By George!" exclaimed Rivers, grabbing his hat. "I believe you're right. Thanks, dear boy! I'll make it a hot scotch."

Brooks glared at him, but he took him out.—Chicago Tribune.

One Hundred Years Ago.

Gen. Zebulon Pike was discovering the peak that bears his name. "The reason why I know I'm the first white man that ever saw it," he said, "is that it hasn't got any patent medicine signs on it." Regretting that he couldn't spare the time to stop and discover the gold that lay hidden all around him, he took a parting look at the snowy summit of the peak and resumed his toilsome march.

Squaring Accounts.

The man was near starving to death. The world owed him a living and he was trying to collect. He accosted the world thus: "You see, nature is pressing me for what I owe her and so I ask you to square up what you owe me." The world laughed: "You pay the debt of nature first and then I'll come across."—Kansas City Times.

Afraid.

"Don't you want to hold the baby?" asked the fond young mother. "No, thank you," promptly replied the old sea captain, backing off. "Don't you like babies?" "Not much, ma'am. The last time I held one it got—er—seasick."

"Pshaw!" exclaimed May Pechie, "I wonder what makes these gloves of mine so tight. "Ah!" sighed the lovelorn youth, "I, too, would be intoxicated were I a glove upon that hand."

DR. TALKS OF FOOD

Pres. of Board of Health.

"What shall I eat?" is the daily inquiry the physician is met with. I do not hesitate to say that in my judgment, a large percentage of disease is caused by poorly selected and improperly prepared food. My personal experience with the fully-cooked food, known as Grape-Nuts, enables me to speak freely of its merits.

"From overwork, I suffered several years with malnutrition, palpitation of the heart, and loss of sleep. Last summer I was led to experiment personally with the new food, which I used in conjunction with good rich cow's milk. In a short time after I commenced its use, the disagreeable symptoms disappeared, my heart's action became steady and normal, the functions of the stomach were properly carried out and I again slept as soundly and as well as in my youth.

"I look upon Grape-Nuts as a perfect food, and no one can gainsay but that it has a most prominent place in a rational, scientific system of feeding. Any one who uses this food will soon be convinced of the soundness of the principle upon which it is manufactured and may thereby know the facts as to its true worth." One Redeeming Feature.

A youthful New York artist recently invited a friend to dinner in her studio. As the bachelor maid's skill was greater in mixing colors than in catering to grosser tastes, the dinner was something to gnash one's teeth at and upon. The roast chicken was tough, the potatoes were underdone, the pineapple salad was pithy. In anguish of mind, the young hostess sank to the depths of apologizing.

"The dinner was delightful, I assure you," said her guest, a charming woman who would cheerfully have perished at the stake rather than utter a tactless word: "I have rarely tasted such tender gravy."

Not So Long.

There was so much ceremony connected with a church cornerstone laying in New York city a few weeks ago that the moving picture machine man felt warranted to take a couple of miles of photographs.

These pictures proved to be very good, and large crowds were delighted with the exact reproduction of the dedicatory exercises.

"I like the moving pictures better than I did the original service," confessed a prominent member of the congregation.

"You do," gasped a devout elder. "I'm surely pained to hear you say so. Why should you prefer the pictures?"

"Because the picture man," answered the prominent member, pleasantly, "cut out all the sermons."

Her Answer.

"Now, children," said the kindergarten teacher, "I have explained to you how many trees give us food, in the way of fruit, and in other ways. You remember that I said men taps the maple trees to get maple sirup. Where does the tapioca come from, then?" "I guess," said Olive, after a pause, "that you tap the oaks, don't you?"—Judge.

Return of the Prodigal.

"I do play in tough luck sometimes," declared the impecunious girl. "Last night, you remember how it rained. I happened to be in the neighborhood of some friends of mine whom I had not seen since the last hard rain. I concluded to call. Before they asked me in they grabbed the umbrella I carried, hurried across the room with it, placed it in a closet there and locked the door on it. "Thank heaven!" they cried. "At last! Our long lost umbrella!"

WOMEN SUFFER

Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing well that they ought to have immediate assistance.

How many women do you know who are perfectly well and strong?

The cause may be easily traced to some feminine derangement which manifests itself in depression of spirits, reluctance to go anywhere or do anything, backache, dragging sensations, flatulency, nervousness, and sleeplessness.

These symptoms are but warnings that there is danger ahead, and unless heeded, a life of suffering or a serious operation is the inevitable result. The best remedy for all these symptoms is made from native roots and herbs. No other medicine in the country has received such widespread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine has such a record of cures of female ills.

Miss J. F. Walsh, of 328 W. 36th St., New York City, writes:—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been of inestimable value in restoring my health. I suffered from female illness which caused dreadful headaches, dizziness, and dull pains in my back, but your medicine soon brought about a change in my general condition, built me up and made me perfectly well."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cures Female Complaints, such as Backache, Falling and Displacements, Inflammation and Ulceration, and organic diseases. It is invaluable in preparing for child-birth and during the Change of Life. It cures Nervous Prostration, Headache, General Debility, and invigorates the whole system.

Happy School Days Over

Viola A. Longtin Edna C. Swanson Paul T. Brunelle Ina M. Linnihan Alice L. Erickson Lucy B. Hunt

From a stage beautifully decorated with their class colors, banked with ferns and potted plants, and in the presence of an exceptionally large crowd of admiring friends, five young ladies and one young man of this city comprising the class of '07 participated in the final program of their high school life, and received the handsome diplomas they have labored so diligently to procure, at the Metropolitan opera house Monday evening.

On the stage with the graduates were Dr. N. M. Watson, Theo. Garceau, H. Hennemuth, T. A. Crompe and S. M. Sivertson, members of the board of education, Superintendent E. W. Chamberlain, Elene Hanson, Laura Willson and Louise Twinum, high school teachers. The decorations of the mammoth auditorium were very pretty and elicited favorable comment. Directly over the front of the stage was the class motto, "Immer Autwarts" made of large maize letters with a sky blue back ground, the class colors, and the back ground was also scattered with a profusion of violets, the class flower. The stage was banked with ferns and potted plants. On either side in the balcony were the lower classes of the high school with the balcony appropriately draped with their respective colors. The pillars throughout the hall were prettily wound with the high school colors.

The exercises of the evening opened with the rendition of two selections by the band orchestra, "Floating Along" and "Tulips and Pansies." This elite musical organization clearly proved themselves artists of the first quality. Their efforts were most liberally applauded.

Rev. H. W. Knox then invoked the aid of He who ruleth all things well, and Miss Alice L. Erickson, salutatorian of the class, arose and after a very touching greeting to the board, class and teachers, delivered a masterly oration entitled, "Lest We Forget." Her remarks showed that she carried her subject well in hand and close attention was paid to all she said, her efforts being responded to enthusiastically by the large audience.

Paul T. Brunelle followed with an oration, "Pursuit of Happiness," and his remarks showed careful preparation and an exceptionally worthy topic.

The next number was a saxaphone solo, Grand Fantasia, "Maritana," by Leland E. Healy. Mr. Healy is surely a master on the instrument judging from the comparatively short time he has had it. He was accompanied on the piano by Miss Lillie Zaiser.

Viola L. Longtin was next with an oration entitled "Preparation." Miss Longtin touched on the importance of what confronted her classmates, and her oration was very well prepared and delivered in an excellent manner.

Edna C. Swanson followed with the "Class History and Will." Her amusing history of the important events was exceptionally well received by all. She then read the last will and testament, in which the property of the class were willed to the members of the lower classes. Her paper showed clever preparation, and was exceptionally meritorious.

Ina M. Linnihan was Class Prophet and Poet. Her prophecy predicted much joy and happiness in store for her classmates.

Lucy B. Hunt, valedictorian, was the last of the class members and delivered a pleasing oration entitled "The Last Leaf," following with a touching farewell to the board, teachers, pupils and public. Her final appearance as a member of this deserving class of young people was the occasion of much applause by the audience.

Mrs. J. Hendrickson, of Fertile, sang two vocal solos, "Mattinata" and "Hosanna," and made an excellent impression.

Superintendent E. W. Chamberlain, in a few well chosen remarks, presented the members of the class with the beautiful diplomas that had been procured. Mr. Chamberlain congratulated the class on their successful finish of a course of diligent labors, and wished them all the greatest success in their battles with the world's work.

Clement E. Brunelle played a cornet solo, "Pretty Jane," which was extremely difficult and was rendered with Mr. Brunelle's usual precision. He responded to an encore.

Rev. H. W. Knox delivered the benediction and the band orchestra played the overture, "Reminiscences of the South," while the friends and relatives of the young people flocked to the stage to present their hearty congratulations.

The class of 1907 is a thing of the past from a standpoint of school life and they go now to take up their parts in the carrying on of the business and social enterprises of the world. It is a source of great satisfaction to all to feel that each individual member of a class whose career has been so successful is especially fitted for what will be taken up in the school of life. They are deserving of all good things of life, and their friends earnestly trust that every problem encountered on their journey down the devious pathway of existence, may be met with the same spirit of determination and energy that has marked their career as scholars.

MISS EICKHOFF WEDS

Sister of Mrs. Arthur Zaiser of This City Was Married in Crookston Monday.

Monday afternoon at four o'clock in the presence of about forty relatives and intimate friends, occurred the wedding of Miss Flora Eickhoff daughter of Christ Eickhoff, and John Arthur Williams, of Grand Forks, at home of the bride in Crookston. Rev. W. S. Ward of the Presbyterian church officiated. The rooms were prettily decorated. The parlor, where the ceremony was performed, was in green and white and the dining room in purple and white. The white twisted loops used from the corners of the room to the center were caught here and there with the purple iris, while bowls of the iris graced the buffet. The bride was all one could ask of a blushing June bride in her white Persian lawn bridal gown which was trimmed in valenciennes lace. In her hands she carried a bunch of bridal roses. Her bridesmaid, Miss Anna Eickhoff, was dressed in a becoming gown of blue voile and carried pink roses. The groom was dressed in the conventional black and was attended by his brother Earl Williams of Grand Forks. Miss Frankie Eickhoff, sister of the bride, played the wedding march. Mr. and Mrs. Williams left Monday evening for the Twin Cities and will visit in various places before going to housekeeping in Grand Forks. The out of town guests were Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Zaiser of this city, John Eickhoff and daughter, Thea, of Grand Forks, and Earl Williams of Grand Forks. Mr. and Mrs. Williams received many beautiful wedding presents. The bride has always been very popular among the younger set and takes with her the best wishes of a host of friends.

A Hair Dressing

Nearly every one likes a fine hair dressing. Something to make the hair more manageable; to keep it from being too rough, or from splitting at the ends. Something, too, that will feed the hair at the same time, a regular hair-food. Well-fed hair will be strong, and will remain where it belongs—on the head, not on the comb!

SUBTERRANEAN RIVERS.

Yucatan's Only Streams Flow Beneath Coral Rock.

There are no streams in Yucatan which flow above the ground, but the whole peninsula is one vast table of coral rock and beneath it are immense sheets of fresh water, with regular though ill defined tides and currents. Along the coasts these subterranean waters are quite near the surface, but in the interior, where the calcareous layer is of great thickness, the waters are low down. At intervals they break into caverns formed by earthquakes by pressure of their own force or by the infiltration of surface water into the natural grottoes of the coral rock and wherever the water can be reached, whether through artificial pits or by the operations of nature, the place is called a cenote. There are a great many of them scattered all over Yucatan, and those near Merida are utilized as public bathhouses, affording most refreshing resorts.

Centuries ago the Indians marked the courses of the subterranean rivers by heaps of stones and always built their cities close by the water caves, as their ruins show, and it is interesting to note to this day all the civilized centers of Yucatan have arisen around these natural reservoirs. There are many forms of cenotes. When the water flows at a slight depth and the calcareous layer has been only partially eaten away there follows an irregular sinking, which forms a cave, opening from side to side, but when the crust is thicker and the underground stream has a regular course the soil is generally corroded in a circular space and the vault thus formed, lacking support, falls in, making an immense open wall. Often the crust is so deep that the soft parts only crumble down, leaving a small aperture toward the top, fashioning a real grotto, with stalactites and stalagmites galore. Again, it happens that the crust is exceedingly thick, when a colossal subterranean passage, like a tunnel, is formed. In short, all the variations which an undisturbed stream may produce in a friable soil by the silent work of ages may be here witnessed. The cenote of which I write is a natural cavern nearly fifty feet deep, broken down at one side, thus forming a gigantic arch. Within it appears every form of stalagmite and stalactite, and its roof is perforated with holes, in which are thousands of birds' and hornets' nests. At the bottom of it, reached by a flight of stone steps from the charming garden above, is an extensive sheet of clear, fresh water, containing a multitude of tiny fish (Pescado cenote) similar to those found in the Mammoth cave of Kentucky, only these are not eyeless. The overhanging roots of trees fringe its broken arch, affording shelter to innumerable lizards and iguanas, which dart along the ledges like embodied sunbeams, while above them countless swallows circle in masses so dense that the whirring of their wings produces a deafening noise, echoed from below in hollow reverberations.

The Italian Baby.

No infant receives a warmer welcome to the world or is more happily born than the Italian baby. No infant is the object of more caresses or is more fondly admired. Indeed, no matter how poor the mother and father may be, no matter how large the family, they have very merry times when another son or daughter comes to them. The neighbors are invited in, a feast is prepared, a gallon or two of cheap wine is procured, and the merriment sometimes lasts several days. The Italian considers there are only three great events in the life of man—namely, his birth, marriage and death. These three events never pass without a gorgeous and elaborate celebration. In this simple way they strive to carry out the tender life lesson: "When you were born you wept while those around you smiled. So live that when you die you alone may smile and those around you weep." And so they laugh and drink wine and sing, for they believe it will have an effect upon the life of the quivering form soon to take its place among them.—London Standard.

Machinery of Memory.

The machinery of memory was thus interestingly described by an authority on the brain: "The act of remembering something," he said, "involves a distinct change in the brain substance. The thing to be remembered is recorded by a little nerve cell. The first time the cell does its work an impression is made upon it. But that impression is apt to wear off unless the action of the cell is repeated, and the oftener this is the case the more fixed becomes the impression, or 'cell memory,' as it is called. Suppose that the work of this particular cell is to enable you to recognize a certain smell. If the impression is made but once, the cell may fail to retain it, but if it is repeated several times a lasting impression will be made, and you will recognize the particular odor when you meet with it again."

Southern Wit.

In the early days of the civil war, says Mrs. D. G. Wright in "A Southern Girl In '61," many northern senators were especially violent in their denunciations of the seceding states, occasionally much to the amusement of their listeners.

On one occasion a western senator ended a speech by declaring that were certain threatened events to occur he would "leave this country and join some other nation. Even the Comanches he would prefer to this government in such a case."

Senator Wigfall of Texas rose in answer and stated in a tone of grave remonstrance that he trusted the senator would consider well before he took such a step, "for the Comanches had already suffered too much from contact with the whites."

HANSON BRANCHES OUT

C. L. Hanson Buys More Bank Property at St. Hilaire Last Week.

On last Tuesday a deal was concluded whereby a majority of the stock of the First State Band of St. Hilaire was purchased from J. K. Haaney by C. L. Hanson, who was elected president of the bank the same day by the board of directors, says the St. Hilaire Spectator.

What is now the First State Bank was started by J. K. Hanney as a private bank in the fall of 1898 The business was a successful one, and in 1901 was incorporated as a state bank. At the present the bank has a pay-in capital of of $10,000, and a surplus of $2,000. It has $15,460.20 on deposit, subject to check, $1,207,10 subject to demand and $36,208.47 on time deposit, making a total deposit of $52,875.81. The bank is in a very prosperous condition and the only reason, we understand, for the sale is that Mr. Hannay wishes to join his family in Washington where they have located permanently.

The new president, C. L. Hanson, who is also president of the Merchant State Bank, located here last July, having purchased from L. C. Simons a controlling interest in the Merchants State Bank. Mr. Hanson was not, however, a stranger, as he had been in the county since 1900 and had an extensive acquaintance with the people of Red Lake county. Since taking charge of the Merchants State Bank, Mr. Hanson has shown marked ability, and the increased deposits and business of the bank during the past year show that he has the confidence of the people and plenty of business ability. Mr. Hanson also has strong financial backing so that he will be able at any time to finance any deal that might come up in the business affairs of this community. The stockholders and depositors are also assured that under his managment the affairs of both banks will be so run as to render their interests absolutely safe and secure.

B. E. Burke, the present cashier of the First State Bank, will continue in his position as cashier, of the First State Bank while K. O. Gigstad will continue to officiate as cashier at the Merchants State Bank.

It is possible that in the future the two banks may be consolidated into one stronger and larger institution but that remains for the futrre to decide.

C. L. Hanson has a host of warm personal friends in Red Lake Falls who will learn the above with more than ordinary pleasure. For several months Mr. Hanson was connected with the First State Bank of this city, and during his residence here he built up a friendship among the people that will be everlasting. He has been very successful since removing to St. Hilaire, and that he acquired control of both banks there must surely be pleasing to the residents of that place.

Frank Mahara's Minstrels.

It is hardly necessary to introduce the Mahara Brothers to the theater going public as they have always been high in their estimate as first class purveyors of minstrelsy and ragtime opera for the past sixteen years. This year with a new palace car, twenty five colored artists, a magnificent compliment of scenery and costumes, striking electrical effects and a combination of of specialty artists, dancers and sweet-voiced singers, Mahara Brothers seem to be able to substantiate their claim that they have reached the achme of minstrelsy. At the Metropolitan Opera house, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, June 18—19.

DITCH TURNED DOWN

Judge Watts Dismisses Petition For Proposed Judicial Ditch Number 7.

The adjoined hearing on the proposed Judicial ditch No, 7 was held at Crookston before His Honor Judge Watts last Saturday, and County Attorney Germo went down to represent the farmers out east who opposed the new waterway.

The petition for the new ditch called for its construction through parts of both counties, starting in Polk couny and emptying into Lambert ditch No. 1. The Lambert people objected strenously to the building of this waterway, on the grounds that the present ditch No. 1 was not sufficiently large to carry off the additional water that would be brought down by the new ditch and to make it larger would necessitate the tearing out of their bridges and in much other harm.

At the hearing last Saturday they made their case so strong that the Judge dismissed the petition without further consideration.

It is understood that the farmers of eastern Polk county will build a state ditch instead, getting aid from the state to complete the work, and will arrange it so as not to damage any lands whatever.

Minstrels Coming.

Success is often covered by mistakes; human nature is on the whole generous, or at least good-tempered. It is willing to forgive faults which it can afford to forget but failure does not with any certainty entail condemnation, for again mankind is generous, and nowhere more so than with show people. If you are successful you are a big success, and the rapid strides that Richards & Pringles Famous Georgia Minstrels have made puts them in the front ranks of the minstrel field. They have a recognized standing as being in a clase of their own, diffearnt from all others, but yet a minstrel show. Others with plenty of merit have been failures. Cause —A mistake in management. "A generous public did not crave for it." It is a funny proposition to say the least, but it is a truth and people will continue to go to see the Georgia Minstrels and the forty funmakert at the Opera House on Monday June 24. and after the show will say, "Best I ever saw."

WE BEAT ADA.

Local Ball Team Plays Good Game Sunday.

The local ball team went down to Ada last Sunday and crossed bats with the Ada team on their own diamond.

The game was a good one, and while Red Lake Falls won out it was anybody's contest until the last inning was played.

Pokezwinski and Healy divided honors as slab artists for Red Lake Falls and both did credible work. Sommers, the Ada whirlwind, was in the box for the Adaites and pitched a good game, although the Red Lake Falls boys found him quite often.

The game was a very clean one, and was entirely devoid of rag-chewing. The locals speak in high terms of the Ada boys as entertainers and were delighted with their trip.

ORCHARD IS WITNESS

STEUNENBERG'S SLAYER CONFESSES TO MANY MURDERS.

TALE SICKENS HEARERS

Wrecking of Mines, Brutal Killing of Men and Plots Against Others Related in Boise Trial.

Boise, Idaho.—Alfred Horsley, alias Harry Orchard, the actual assassin of Frank Steunenberg, went on the stand Wednesday as a witness against William D. Haywood, and made public confession of a long chain of brutal, revolting crimes, done, he said, at the inspiration and for the pay of the leaders of the Western Federation of Miners.

An undertaking by the special prosecutors for the state that they would, by later proof and connection, legitimatize his testimony opened the way like a floodgate to the whole diabolical story and throughout the entire day Orchard went on from crime recital to crime recital, each succeeding one seemingly more revolting than those that had come before.

Orchard confessed that as a member of the mob that wrecked the Bunker Hill and Sullivan mill in the Coeur d'Alenes he lighted one of the fuses that carried fire to the giant explosion; confessed that he set the death trap in the Vindicator mine at Cripple Creek that blew out the lives of Superintendent McCormick and Foreman Beck; confessed that because he had not been paid for his first attempt at violence in the Vindicator mine he had been treacherous to his associates by warning the managers of the Florence & Cripple Creek railway that there was a plot to blow up their trains; confessed that he cruelly fired three charges of buckshot into the body of Detective Lyte Gregory, of Denver, killing him instantly; confessed that for days he stalked Gov. Peabody about Denver, waiting a chance to kill him; confessed that he and Steve Adams set and discharged the mine under the depot at Independence that instantly killed 14 men, and confessed that, failing in an attempt to poison Fred Bradley, of San Francisco, he blew him and his house up with a bomb of gelatin.

And he has more brutal crimes to tell that will bring his bloody career down to its end at Caldwell, where with a great bomb he killed Gov. Steunenberg.

The story was told to a tense-nerved, rigid crowd that watched with staring eyes for every move and word of the confessing witness; a crowd that was sickened and weary of its disgusting details long before James H. Hawley, pleading illness of himself at three o'clock in the afternoon, secured adjournment for the day.

TUCKER JAILED FOR CONTEMPT.

Uncle Sam Oil Company Secretary Accuses Federal Judges.

Leavenworth, Kan.—Judge W. C. Hook, of the United States circuit court, Wednesday sentenced H. H. Tucker, Jr., the indicted secretary of the Uncle Sam Oil company, to serve three months in the Leavenworth county jail for contempt of court, the contempt being a sensational affidavit filed by Tucker alleging a conspiracy between Federal Judges Pollock, McPherson and Philips and the Standard Oil company to drive the Uncle Sam company out of business.

Judge Hook delivered a terrific arraignment of Attorney Albert L. Wilson, of Kansas City, who prepared the affidavit. He said the only purpose of filing the affidavit was to create a sensation in the papers and influence the public sentiment. Hook declared there was no precedent for such an affidavit and the clerk of the court was criticised for placing it on file. It was stricken from the files by order of Judge Hook.

Tucker commenced serving his sentence Wednesday night. The bankruptcy proceedings were continued until a judge can be found who can sit in the case. Judge Pollock will not preside.

Bobcat Attacks Rider.

Crookston.—Joseph Dobias, a farmer of Tabor township, had an exciting adventure with a bobcat and perhaps would have been killed but for the intervention of his dog. Dobias was riding from his farm to Angus and the first intimation he had of the animal's presence was when it suddenly sprang at him from the side of the road and bit viciously at his foot.

The animal which Mr. Dobias was riding was a colt, and it became frenzied at the presence of a wild cat and, throwing its rider started to bolt. The bobcat was about to leap upon the prostrate man when the dog interfered and sprang gamely at the creatures throat. A fierce contest ensued in which the dog was getting the worst of it. By this time, however, Dobias had picked himself up and secured a club. With this weapon he waded into the melee and between the man and the dog the cat was soon killed. It was a big fellow, measuring 5 feet 4 inches in length and standing 2 feet 3 inches high.

Horse Kills Child.

St. Paul.—Struck down by a horse her father was riding, little Erna Zimmerman, the five-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. Zimmerman, received injuries from which she died a short time after the accident. Mr. Zimmerman had mounted a horse to drive a herd of cattle to a neighboring farm, the little girl and her sister following a few paces in the rear. As the start was made one of the animals bolted for the pasture gate and Mr. Zimmerman wheeled his horse to head off the runaway. In a stride the horse was upon the two little girls. One managed to escape but the other received a blow from the horse's hoof that fractured her skull, and she died in less than an hour.

Old Mystery Solved.

International Falls.—John Shaw, a native of Ellsworth, Wis., settled on a claim on Bear river, thirty miles west of here, in the fall of 1903. The following June while following a trail from his trading place to his homestead he became lost, and despite the efforts of his relatives and neighbors no trace could be found of him. Log drivers have just found the skeleton of the old man on the banks of the Bear river a short distance from his trail, they being identified by a watch and a compass. Nothing was found to indicate foul play and it is more than likely that the aged homesteader died from exhaustion and exposure. The bones were buried on the homestead and thus ends a mystery that has for three years been a subject of interest in this locality.

Two Brothers Drown.

Akeley. — Henry Fegre, and Ole Fegre, aged twenty and twenty-seven years, respectively, were drowned in Akeley. In company with three other young men they were crossing the lake in a small rowboat, which was capsized. Three clung to the boat and were rescued. The Fegre boys struck out for shore, but the distance was to great and they disappeared before help could reach them. The bodies have been recovered.

Boy Killed in Runaway.

Taylors Falls.—In a collision between two run-away teams the five-year-old son of Dave Connores of Osceola was killed, his skull being fractured. Postmaster C. D. Emery of St. Croix Falls, sustained three broken ribs; several others were slightly injured. The accident occured while on the return from a ball game and while the teams were going down a steep hill.

Two Boys Suffocated.

St. Paul.—Left alone in the house while their father and older brother had gone to a wedding, the three youngest sons of Sam Kopilovich were suffocated by smoke from a fire which broke out in their home at 348 Chestnut street. Two of the boys died while being removed in the ambulance. The third was taken to the city hospital and will recover.

Ends Life With Paris Green.

Willow River.—I. W. Paap, employed by the Atwood Lumber company of this place, committed suicide by taking a dose of paris green. Ill health is the only cause given for the act. He leaves a wife and three children.

Lost Boy's Body Found.

Solway.—The dead body of little "Nickie" Shepherd, three years old, who wandered away from his home near this place and became lost, was found about a mile from home in a swamp by Frank Klingbeil, a neighbor of the Shepherds.

Arrest Murder Suspect.

Minneapolis.—Theodore Wicherski, wanted in Little Falls on a charge of murder, was arrested in Minneapolis by Detectives Lyons and Purcell, in company with Sheriff Frank Long of Little Falls. Some months ago Wicherski attended a celebration near Little Falls and while intoxicated got into an altercation and pulled a revolver and fired into the crowd. An elderly woman was struck and fatally wounded. Wicherski made his escape and was discovered working in a mill in Minneapolis.

State Fair Attractions.

Hamline. — Vice-President C. M. Griggs of the State Fair who is chairman of the committee of amusements, is home from a trip to Chicago and other points where he has been in touch with the best things now obtainable for amusement features, and is ready to announce, practically complete, the program of specialties for the fair of 1907.

One of the great specialties secured is a troup of eight Bedouin Arabs who are expert acrobats. These are genuine Arabs wearing the costume of the desert and showing the great agility of a people trained to constant muscular activity and tremendous endurance under all conditions.

A very clever act will be presented by Willis and Hassan who are, perhaps, the best equilibrists now before the public. Their specialty is head balancing with ladders etc.

Some exceedingly fine work in the contortion line will be presented by La Carmontella an Italian contortionist of European repute and "Norman the Frog Man" so called because of his ability to assume the most grotesque shapes and positions.

Comedy will be represented by Fink's mules—exceedingly funny—Marzella and Mallay who do a comedy bar act and a comedy wrestling match, and the Johnny Jones Country Circus, a laughable burlesque in which goats, pigs, geese, dogs, cats, donkeys and other domestic animals take a prominent part.

Something much above the average in trained animal showing will be seen in Howard's dogs and ponies. They put on an act in which a man and a woman and four dogs and four ponies participate in showing the remarkable attainments possible for dumb brutes.

Several fine acts will be of the aerial class. The Zamora Family is regarded as the finest trapeze troupe now possible to be engaged and the Weitzman are the premiers of the high-wire. Greatest of all is Diavolo the high diver who descends from an immense height and disappears in a lake of fire, a most horribly realistic piece of work.

The most sensational of all the acts, however, is the marvelous automobile which not only leaps a great gap after descending a steep incline at high speed, but turns a complete somersault in the air before reaching the ground.

Victim of Reckless Driving.

Staples.—As the result of the alleged reckless driving of John Udach, Mrs. Peter Kelly is dead and her daughter and granddaughter are in serious conditions from injuries received in a runaway.

Mrs. Kelly and her daughter, Mrs. Howard Huff, with the latter's child, were driving into town when the team they were driving took fright from being run into by a team of mules which were driven along the road by Udach at a furious clip. The neckyoke of the Kelly team broke, allowing the pole to drop to the ground, and throwing the wagon into the ditch. The occupants were thrown violently out, Mrs. Kelly's head striking a stump. She was dead when picked up. Mrs. Huff and her child were badly cut and bruised.

Udach was arrested, but claimed to remember nothing of the runaway.

Shoots His Arm Off.

Willow River.—While out hunting and fishing Peter Solak accidentally discharged a shotgun which he was taking from a boat where he had been fishing, the contents entering his left arm near the shoulder, almost severing it from the body. He was brought to this place immediately, where the physicians found it necessary to amputate the arm. Mr. Solak is in a very weak condition and may not recover. He has a wife and four small children.

Found Dead in a Cabin.

Spooner.—A man named Davis, who used to teach school on the Canadian side of the lake, was found dead in a cabin on Hacket Island, one of the islands in the Lake of the Woods, by a cook on Capt. Beaudro's boat. The body of Davis, on which were night clothes, lay on the floor. It seemed as if he had tried to kindle a fire, but died before it could be done.

NEWS NOTES.

Little Falls.—Ten cans of brook trout, containing about 50,000 trout minnows, have been planted in various streams within a radius of a few miles of this city. The trout were sent from the Glenwood hatchery at the request of local anglers.

St. Paul.—A patrolman who had an alarm clock in his hat to arouse him once an hour was removed by the police board.

Cottonwood.—Fire totally destroyed the large barn on the J. C. Gray farm three miles south of here, together with nine horses, five cows, grain and machinery owned by T. Loland, the tenant. The barn was insured for $600, about one-fourth of its value, while Loland's loss is total. The cause of the fire is unknown.

Minneapolis.—A state convention of the Christian churches of Minnesota will be held in Minneapolis June 17, 18 and 19. The sessions are to be held in the Portland Avenue Church of Christ. Delegates to the number of 400 are expected to attend.

RAN THE FIRST ENGINE

ENGINEER OF FAMOUS "ROCKET" IS STILL ALIVE.

Edward Entwistle, of Des Moines, Ia., Has Unique Claim to Distinction —Recalls Building of Locomotive and Trial Trip.

St. Louis.—The engineer who ran the famous Rocket of George Stephenson, the first passenger locomotive to draw a passenger train in the world, is still alive, in good health, and celebrated his ninety-second birthday a few weeks ago at his home in Des Moines, Ia. Edward Entwistle is the name of the man who has this unique claim to distinction.

Entwistle was a lad not 16 years of age when Stephenson completed his plans, secured a charter for the railroad between Liverpool and Manchester, laid his track and was ready to run the train. Entwistle was recommended to Stephenson by no less a personage than the duke of Bridgewater, whose steward informed his highness that Entwistle was the best mechanic in the shops.

Mr. Entwistle, in his humble home, delights to live over the old days and tell the story of the preparations and the trial trip, the events of which are fresh in his mind from frequent iteration. His story is told in this manner:

"I was born at Tilsey's Bank, Lancashire, England, March 24, 1815. When less than 15 years old I was apprenticed for seven years to the trade of mechanical engineering in the [illegible] works of George Stephensoa and his son Robert, at Newcastle.

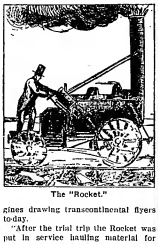
"In 1825 the Liverpool & Manchester Railway company began building a railroad across Chat Moss, an im[illegible] between the two cities. Steam carriages had been in use for some time carrying light merchandise at a low speed over the ordinary roads. The Stephensons believed the engines could be made to run on iron rails at high speed. The directors of the railway company were decidedly skeptical, but finally decided to offer a prize of $2,500 for an engine, conditioned that of six tons' weight it must consume its own smoke, draw, day by day, 20 tons weight, including its own water tank and tender, at ten miles per hour, with a steam pressure not exceeding 50 pounds per square inch, and must be delivered at the Liverpool end of the road before Oct. 1, 1829, the price not to exceed $2,750.

"My employers, the Stephensons, decided to compete for the prize, notwithstanding the opinion of the leading engineers of the country that not only a high speed engine, but the building of the road, would be a failure. The elder Stephenson contracted to construct the railroad across the bog, a huge nudertsking.

"The locomotive was coastructed in the shops where I wns employed, I heing eagaged for some weeks on various parts of its mechanism and assistlag in putting it togethor at the last. I was then hut a mere lad, hut had good mechanical lagenuity and understood machinery thoroughly, having a special kaack snd fancy for it.

"When our locomotive was completed it was named the Rocket, was given a trial trip, nnd won the prize against three competitors, settling the question for all time whether horse traction or steam traction was to be used on railroads.

"By the skill aad laveative genius of George nnd Robert Stephenson that first engine took on the form in all essentials mnintained la the great engines drawing transcontinental flyers to-day.



The "Rocket."

"After the trial trip the Rocket was put in service hauling material for construction of the road. The gauge was four feet eight and one-half inches, or that of the regular wagon road, Stephenson intending that if his locomotive failed on iron rails to run it on dirt roads. It is a singular fact that the gauge of the Rocket has been the standard gauge of railroads all over the world. Other widths have been tried, but abandoned.

"When the railroad was completed, Sept. 13, 1830, was set for the date of the trial trip drawlag passenger cars. The train consisted of two double-decked carriages, each seating 18 persons—nine on the upper deck nnd nine below. The weight of the traiu was not quite ten tons. The average speed was 14 miles an hour, although at times we got as high as 29 miles an hour."

Mr. Entwistle has not seen the Rocket since it was exhihited at Philadelphia, and greatly regrets that he was uuable to go to St. Louis two summers ago and see his pet once more before he dies.

"HELLO" GIRLS OF MANILA.

The Work Attracts Members of Aristocratic Filipino Families.

Manila.—Manila telephone subscribers feel that, though living in what the average American believes to be a semi-barbarious land, the rest of the world has no "edge" on them in being served by comely maidens as "hello girls."

A "Central" Office in Manila.

The Filipino telephone operator comes from the best families of her land and takes her work more seriously than her fair-skinned sister of the occident. She has her servant, who is also her chaperon, to accompany her to the office, carrying her lunch, and who calls to chaperon her back to the security of her home when [illegible] on her day's work. The Spanish custom of never permitting an unmarried woman above the age of 12 years to leave the portals of her casa unaccompanied, still prevails with both Spaniards and Filipinos of the better class, and their employment as telephone operators permit no relaxation of the watchful care.

The fact that the field of labor, aside from domestic service, for the Filipino girl is so limited, makes employment in this line especially desirable and much sought after by the daughters of the well-to-do Filipinos. Hence, to be n "hello girl" in the Philippines is an honor carrying with it prestige and enters into the best society.

To serve as "central" in Manila, a girl must speak and understand English, Spanish and Tagalog, nnd some of them possess n "working" knowledge of Chinese, Japanese and other oriental tongues.

The chief operator—an American woman—of the recently established Manila line states that the Filipino girls employed as operators nre very apt and intelligent and are rapidly developing a most satisfactory service. They receive, as beginners, n salary of 20 pesos ($10) per month, which is increased to twice that amount on their becoming proficient.

As the word "hurry" is an unknown one in the far east, so likewise it is often necessary for an impatient subscriber to curb his temper when telephoning. But the tones of the dulcet-voiced operator, "Dhe lyne ees heesea senor," soothes his soul to patience.

NEW HEAD FOR PATENT OFFICE.

Grit Makes Edward B. Moore of Michigan Commissioner.

Washington.—Edward B. Moore of Michigan has been appointed hy the president to succeed Frederick I. Allen as commissioner patents. Mr. Moore, who is the present assistant commissioner, won his appointment through pure grit. Moore came to Washington when a boy to visit his brother, who was secretary of the Spanish claims commission. While playing ball on a scrub team, a senate page told him he had resigned his place. Young Moore immediately hustled down to the senata chamher, and tackled Senator Morrill of Maine for the job. In 1876 President Grant appointed him inspector of internal revenue, and he had a lot to do with the expose of the whisky frauds. After that be wns appointed to a position in the patent office, and in 1900

THEIR LAST HOUR.

The lovely maiden shuddered involuntarily, and drew closer to her lover. A look of unutterahle sadness came over her face, and a tear drop, welling from her azure eye, stole down her nose and made a hlister on the young man's fresh white collar.

"Why are you sad?" he murmured, sneezing violently as her wayward tresses tickled his left nostril.

"I was thinking," she said, gulping down a sob and a marshmellow simultaneously, "that this will be our last evening together until to-morrow!"

FOR THE HOSTESS

Some New Ideas In Seasonable Entertainments and Answers to Perplexing Questions.

An English Garden Party.

This "month of roses" is just the time for an English garden party which is nothing more nor less than an old-fashioned lawn party only this name sounds "sort of grand and foreigny."

If the weather should prove inclement, of course the affair mnst he held in tha house. Spread rugs on the porches and lawn, with palms on the steps and on tahorettes conveniently placed. Two or three stringed instruments should furnish the music, hut a good harpist will be sufficient. Tea and iced beverages are served from small tables shielded by huge Japanese umbrellas; young womeu are asked to do honor at these tahles, assisted hy one or two servants. English muffins, oat cakes, orange marmalade and sweets like candied ginger, preserved fruits and stuffed dates. There may he tennis and croquet tournaments, for the latter game has been received again into favor along with many so called old-fashioned games and customs. The girls wear their prettiest gowns, lingerie hats and the men appear in two-piece suits, soft shirts and no gloves.

For a Church Society.

Will Madame Merri kindly tell us how we may entertain nhout 60 young people, members of a church organization? "COMMITTEE."

To entertain so large a company I should ask the girls to come representing the title of a song; ask the boys to hring some musical instrnment, anything from a Jew's harp to a hand organ. If a "song" is so well disguised as to remain unguessed, the girl must sing one verse accompanied by one or more of the instruments she may select; the result is amusing, in the extreme.

The secret of success at any of these entertainments is to have each person individually interested with n part to do. A cake made from this "Scripture" recipe could he served; it is very good and would add interest to the occasion. The recipe could be type written and sold for a small sum.

Recipe for Scripture Cake.—Take four cups of First Kings, fourth chapter, and twenty-second verse.

One cup of Judges, fifth chapter, twenty-fifth verse, last clause.

Two cups of Jeremiah, sixth chapter, twentieth verse.

Two cups of First Samuel, thirtieth chapter, twelfth verse.

Two cups of Nahum, third chapter, twelfth verse.

A pinch of Leviticus second, thirteenth verse.

One-half cup of Judges, fourth chapter, nineteenth verse, last clause.

Two teaspoons of Amos, fourth chapter, fifth verse. (Baking powder.)

Season to taste with Second Chronicles, ninth chapter, ninth verse.

"Hard Times" Party.

Will you please suggest entertainment and refreshment for a "hard times" party to occur the latter part of June, the occasion heing a seventeenth anniversary. "BAB."

A "poverty" or "hard times" party has heen described so often in this column that it seems as if all readers must know ahout such nn affair. Use a red tahlecloth, wooden chairs and henches, candles, tin and wooden dishes, and have inexpensive prizes for the worst and hest costume. Articles to he found at a fiva and ten-cent store are the kind to get. Bean-hags, soap-hubbles and old-time games are suitahle pastimes. For a centerpiece have an unfrosted sponge cake with candles.

Form for Invitations.

I wish to give a party soon, especially for three or four young married couples of our village. How shall I word the invitations? Shall I say "In honor of so nnd so?" What form of an invitation is used for afternoon card parties? D. A. B.

Mention the name of each couple. A good form is this:

"Mr. and Mrs. Carroll Brown will entertain at dinner (mention day and date) in honor of (hera write the uames)."

For the card party, use your visiting card with "Cards" written in the lower left hand corner, also the time, day and date.

Dear Madame Merri: I am to he best man at a coming wedding; on the occasion of the groom's "stag" dinner I know I shall he expected to give a toast pertinent to the happy event. Will you suggest something short. RURAL.

In point of brevity I think the two sentiments given will serve your purpose:

"True love and friendliness Hallow thy happiness."

"This is a lucky day, boy."
MADAME MERRI.

HEALTH AND BEAUTY

Reasons Why the One Is Absolutely Essential to the Acquirement of the Other.

Do not hathe when tired, hungry or immediately after eating. This especially applies to the tuh hath.

Is heauty skin deep? No, beauty is hlood deep, for heauty is huilt on health, and health on purity of hlood.

The brain workers need comparatively little of Carbohydrates—that is, starches and fats; much less, indeed, than one employed at manual labor requires.

A little time devoted to exercise every day is better than a little more time every other day. It is the steady dropping of water that wears away stone.

Nature never intended that all the nutrition of the body should be derived from any one class of foodstuffs, which would require the use of certain juices and imply the disuse of others which normally are present.

Breathing through the nostrils, with the mouth closed is the proper and only way to hreathe. It is right hecause it is the primary function of the nostrils. If all persons breathed through the nostrils nasal catarrh would become unknown.

A sallow or muddy complexion is indicative of poor health, poor digestion and poor circulation. Cleanse the body inside as well as outside, and then seen that you have an abundance of fresh air. Avoid tea, white bread, and milk or cream in coffee—in fact, anything that overtaxes the liver aud stomach.

The muscles of the face may he developed nnd made firm by careful manipulation. Nutritious food should he eaten to supply the muscles of tha face the same as the other muscles of the hody. Muscles that are not worked lack firmness; therefore I would suggest a light massage for the cheeks, using the thumb and forefinger vigorously, but not so as to bruise the flesh.

Avoid a draft when warm. It may he comfortable indeed, but that comfort will be short lived. It must he understood that a breeze or moving air is not necessarily a draft. The precaution is given for the purpose of a too sudden checking of perspiration.

FOR THE SLIPPERS.

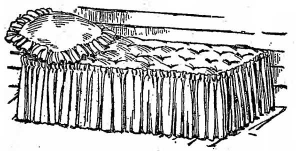
Tulle pompons trimmed witb spangles for the slippers.

Feathers in New Forms.

Ostrich fenthers are more worn than ever, and the newest thing is very narrow pin fentbers made up into aigrettes. But the new thing of the season is a boa like hat trimming mnde nll of "Casoar" plumage, which is very much like paradise feathers, only shorter and curled. These cost from $10 up to nearly three figures, so they nre not likely to be common.

Don't be afraid to ohey. A mnn must learn to ohey before he mny hope to command.

Pretty Couch for the Summer Piazza



For the summer piazza one of the most convenient piecas of furnitura is a folding couch that can he raised up and fastened to the side of the house somewhat similar to a mantel folding hed.

Tha illustration shows such a couch that is attached to the weather boards of the house at the inner side, hy means of large strap hinges, while the outer edga is supported on legs fastened to the under side of tha woodwork.

An old hair mattress can he employed as the topping, and it should he laid on tha platform and held down hy means of denim, which is drawn down all around the edges and tacked securely to the wood.

The tufted effect shown in the illustration is ohtained by making holes in tha wood, and with a long pack needle string is drawn up through the mattress and tied at the top through the edge of a metal or cloth-covered hutton.

Where tha string is tied the matress is depressed so the button is deep seated.

A valanca of the denim is made and gathered around the front and two ends, as shown.

In rainy weather or when more piazza space is required the couch can he raised, valance tucked in and the whole thing fastened to the weather boards hy means of a strap.

MORE LOCAL......

"Bad Bill" Ittner came up with his extreme width and breadth from Minneapolis Monday, and will spend a few weeks, at least, with his mother and with his many admiring friends. Will is contemplating going out with an engineering crew for the summer, but has not fully decided as to when he will go. "Bad Bill" has but one more year to attend the 'varsity to complete his course as a full-fledged civil engineer, and while under the new three year rule he is barred from further star performances on the 'varsity gridiron, nevertheless he will have acquired a profession at which he cannot help but be eminently successful.

At the Metropolitan opera house last evening the Misses Alyce Boyd Etta Gareeau, Mollie Allard, Albina Lemieux, Etta Hennemuth, Gertie Hennemuth, Ellen Brady, Mayme Erickson and Lillian Buse were hostesses at a delightful social function and fro n early evening until a late hour a large crowd of people partock of their hospitality. The young ladies decorated the large auditorium in a pleasing manner, only as these artistic decoraters could do, and to sweet strains of music provided by Freund's orchestra the people danced away several happy hours. Frappe was served during the evening by the Misses Rosalba Lemieux, Helen Erickson, and Lenora Garceau, and at midnight ice cream and cake were provided. The party was one of the most enjoyable of the year and the young ladies placed themselves in the front rank as entertainers.

Frank Mahara does not believe that the theatre-going public has lost entirely its old taste for minstrel shows. There are others holding the same belief, for the Grand was crowded last evening when the minstrel troupe bearing the Mahara name, sang, joked and danced through a program of merit. The usual "first part" was presented in in the old half-circle style, with four huge moutbed, noisy fellows on the ends. The singine both vocal and chorous, was a large part of the program and easily the best. The specialties have been presented before in Salt Lake, and for that reason were not strong, as they might have been regarded. James Harris has his hoops under control but the act is hold. Maria Bostwick worked earnestly to please the audience, and her songs and skits won applause. Shaw and Clinton with jokes and poplar song shared the audience's favor. James Harris earns his salary, making his first bow as an end msn, next as a hoop artist and finally as a trombone virtuoso. He was clever in all three stunts. John Pamplin, dressed as satan, did some devilish fine juggling. Salt Lake, Utah, Herald, Sept. 21, '06. At the metropolitan opera house, Tuesday and Wednesday, June, 18-19.

Teachers' Meeting Postponed.

Owing to the conflict between the date set for the meeting of the Teachers' Protective Association and the date for the Fire Tournament at Red Lake Falls, and in view of the fact that the Summer school begins only a week from that date, it is considered best to postpone the meeting until a later date.

The teachers attending the summer school can then decide as to what time would be most suitable for the meeting. It is hoped that this arrangement will prove satisfactory to the members of the Teachers' Protective association.

Through a curious oversight, or it was intentional, the new passenger rate bill which went into effect recently will compel all babies to pay fare on the 'choo choo' cars. The provisions of the bill are that all passengers over twelve years of age may ride for two cents per mile and all below twelve must pay half fare. Heretofore, any children between six and twelve years of age were obliged to pay, while those under six were carried free. The new law does not discriminate in children but will treat all alike and the railroads, which have made up their minds to comply with the strict letter of the law, and which do not care to incur any liabilities for violating its plain provisions, will charge the nursing infant one cent per mile fare.

THE LIONS OF THE LORD

A TALE OF THE OLD WEST

BY HARRY LEON WILSON AUTHOR OF THE SPENDERS

By the light of the fire the little man could see their faces, and he became suddenly coherent, smiling at them in the old way.

"Why have you come so far in the [illegible]" he asked Prudence, taking one of her cool hands between his own [illegible]

"[illegible] you poor little father! Why have you come when you should be in bed? You are burning with [illegible]"

"Yes, yes, dear, but it's over now. It's the end. I came here—to be here. I came to say my last prayer [illegible] lady. And they will come to [illegible] me here. You must go before they come."

"Who will find you?"

"They, from the church. I didn't mean to do it, but when I was on my feet something forced it out of me. I knew what they would do, but I was ready to die, and I hoped I could [illegible] some of them."

"But no one shall hurt you."

"Don't tempt me to stay any longer, dear, even if they would let me. Oh, you don't know, you don't [illegible] and that devil's drumming over there [illegible] madden me as on that other night. But it's just—my God, how [illegible]"

"Come away, then. Ruel will find your [illegible], and we'll ride home."

"It's so late—don't ask me to leave [illegible] now. It would only follow [illegible] this way that night—the [illegible]—the beating got into my blood and hammered on my brain till I didn't know. Prudence, I must tell [illegible] everything—"

He glanced at Follett appealingly, as he had looked at the others when he left the platform that day, be[illegible] some expressions of friendliness.

"Yes, I must tell you—everything." But her face lighted as Follett interrupted him.

"You tell her," said Follett, doggedly, "how you saved her that day and kept her like your own and brought her up to be a good woman —that's what you tell her." The gratitude in the little man's eyes had grown with each word.

"Yes, yes, dear, I have loved you like my own little child, but your father and mother were killed here that day—and I found you and loved you, such a dear, forlorn little girl—will you hate me now?" he broke off anxiously. She had both his hands in her own.

"But why, how could I hate you? You are my dear little sorry father—all I've known. I shall always love you."

"That will be good to take with me," he said, smiling again. "It's all I've got to take—it's all I've had since the day I found you. You are good," he said, turning to Follett.

"Oh, shucks!" answered Follett.

A smile of rare contentment played over the little man's face.

In the silence that followed, the funeral drum came booming in upon them over the ridge, and once they saw an Indian from the encampment standing on top of the hill to look down at their fire. Then the little man spoke again.

"You will go with him," he said to Prudence. "He will take you out of here and back to your mother's people."

"She's going to marry me," said Follett. The little man smiled at this.

"It is right—the Gentile has come to take you away. The Lord is cunning in His vengeance. I felt it must be so when I saw you together."

After this he was so quiet for a time that they thought he was sleeping. But presently he grew restless again, and said to Follett:

"I want you to have me buried here. Up there to the north, 200 yards from here on the right, is a dwarf cedar standing alone. Straight over the ridge from that and half-way down the other side is another cedar growing at the foot of a ledge. Below that ledge is a grave. There are stones piled flat, and a cross cut in the one toward the cedar. Make a grave beside that one, and put me in it—just as I am. Remember that—uncoffined. It must be that way, remember. There's a little book here in this pocket. Let it stay with me—but surely uncoffined, remember, as—as the rest of them were."

"But, father, why talk so? You are going home with us."

"There, dear, it's all right, and you'll feel kind about me always when you remember me?"

"Don't—don't talk so."

"If that beating would only stay out of my brain—the thing is crawling behind me again! Oh, no, not yet—not yet! Say this with me, dear:

"'The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want.

"'He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: He leadeth me beside the still waters.'"

She said the psalm with him, and he grew quiet again.

"You will go away with your husband, and go at once—" He sat up suddenly from where he had been lying, the light of a new design in his eyes.

"Come—you will need protection now—I must marry you at once. Surely that will be an office acceptable in the sight of God. And you will remember me better for it—and kinder. Come, Prudence; come, Ruel!"

"But, father, you are sick, and so weak—let us wait."

"It will give me such joy to do it —and this is the last."

She looked at Follett questioningly, but gave him her hand silently when he arose from the ground where he had been sitting.

"He'd like it, and it's what we want —all simple," he said.

In the light of the fire they stood with hands joined, and the little man, too, got to his feet, helping himself up by the cairn against which he had been leaning.

Then, with the unceasing beats of the funeral drum in their ears, he made them man and wife.

"Do yoo, Ruel, take Prudence by the right hand to receive her unto yourself to be your lawful and wedded wife, and you to be her lawful and wedded husband for time and eternity—"

"Oh! Oh! My Poor Sorry Little Father—He Was So Good to Me!"

Thus far he had followed the formula of his church, but now he departed from it with something like defiance coming up in his voice.

"—with a covenant and promise on your part that you will cleave to her and to none other, so help you God, taking never another wife in spite of promise or threat of any priesthood whatsoever, cleaving unto her and her alone with singleness of heart?"

When they had made their responses, and while the drum was beating upon his heart, he pronounced them man and wife, sealing upon them "the blessing of the holy resurrection, with power to come forth in the morning clothed with glory and immortality."

When he had spoken the final words of the ceremony, he seemed to lose himself from weakness, reaching out his hands for support. They helped him down on to the saddle blanket that Follett had brought, and the latter now went for more wood.

When he came back they were again reciting the psalm that had seemed to quiet the sufferer.

"'Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for Thou art with me; Thy rod and Thy staff they comfort me.'"

Follett spread the other saddle blanket over him. He lay on his side, his face to the fire, one moment saying over the words of the psalm, but the next listening in abject terror to something the others could not hear.

"I wonder you don't hear their screams," he said, in one of these moments; "but their blood is not upon you." Then, after a little:

"See, it is growing light over there. Now they will soon be here. They will know where I had to come, and they will have a spade." He seemed to be fainting in his last weakness.

Another hour they sat silently beside him. Slowly the dark over the eastern hill lightened to a gray. Then the gray paled until a flush of pink was there, and they could see about them in the chill of the morning.

Then came a silence that startled them all. The drum had stopped and the night-long vibrations ceased from their ears.

They looked toward the little man with relief, for the drumming had tortured him. But his breathing was shallow and irregular now, and from time to time they could hear a rattle in his throat. His eyes, when he opened them, were looking far off. He was turning restlessly and muttering again. She took his hands and found them cold and moist.

"His fever must have broken," she said, hopfully. The little man opened his eyes to look up at her, and spoke though absently, and not as if he saw her:

"They will have a spade with them when they come, never fear. And the spot must not be forgotten—300 yards north of the dwarf cedar, then straight over the ridge and half-way down, to the other cedar below the sandstone —and uncoffined, with the book here in this pocket where I have it. 'Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: Thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over. Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord forever.'"

He started up in terror of something that seemed to be behind him, but fell back, and a moment later was rambling off through some sermon of the bygone year.

Slowly, then, the little smile faded —the wistful light of it dying for the last time. The tired head fell suddenly back and the wan lips closed over lifeless eyes.

From the look of rest on the still face it was as if, in his years of service and sacrifice, the little man had learned how to forgive his own sin in the flash of those last heart-beats when his soul had rushed out to welcome Death.

Prudence had arisen before the end came. Follett was glad she did not see the eyes glaze nor the head drop. Then he sprang quickly up and put his arm about Prudence.

"Come, sit here close by the fire, dear—no, around this side. It's all over now."

"Oh! Oh! My poor, sorry little father—he was so good to me!" She threw herself on the ground, sobbing.

Follett spread a saddle blanket over the huddled figure at the foot of the cross. Then he went back to take her in his arms and give her such comfort as he could.

CUT OUT FOR A DIPLOMAT.

Quick Wit Extricated Young Man from Difficult Situation.

Most people take things lightly at the seashore, so that probably accounted for the fact that a certain young man found himself engaged to two charming girls at one and the same time while enjoying his vacation during the past summer.

One day he was seated, half dozing, on the deserted piazza of the hotel where all three of the interested parties were stopping when suddenly two little hands were clasped tightly over his eyes, and a sweet voice whispered, "Guess who?"

Was it Clara or Nan? Should he say one of the names and chance it? These thoughts were flashing through his brain, when an inspiration struck him.

"It's the dearest, sweetest, prettiest little girl in all the world," he said.

"Oh, you dear old Jack boy!" she whispered, satisfied and delighted, and the hands dropped from his eyes to his shoulders.

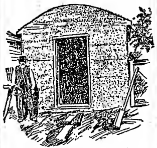
A CONCRETE MILK HOUSE.

Any Farmer May Make One at Small Expense.

A house for keeping milk cool in the summer and storing fruit and vegetables in the winter may be constructed out of concrete from floor to roof. A man in a little Missouri town built one in the following manner, says the Kansas City Star. An excavation was made in the ground four feet deep the desired length and breadth of the building. Two posts were then set in the ground at each corner, leaving a space between them the thickness of the walls. Inch boards a foot wide were placed on the inside of these posts next the ground. The first layer of concrete which was made from cement and tolerably coarse gravel was put between them. After this was finished another round of boards was put just above the first ones and these were filled between with concrete also. Then another course of concrete was put above this and so on until the desired height was reached. As the concrete hardened the boards were removed. The door frame was set between the boards in one end of the building when the walls had been built up to a level with the top of the ground, and it was made secure by long bolts extending from the sides of frame into the concrete walls. The roof was made an oval shape by semicircle rafters, the ends of which rested on the top of the side walls. After being covered over with boards a layer of concrete was spread on, leaving a place for a cement chimney at the center of the roof. The rafters and sheeting were left to give strength to the concrete. The floor was also made of cement and inclined slightly toward one corner where an eight-gallon jar had been sunk, into which any water might drain. The doors of the house were made double, one opening inward and the other outward. When shut they kept out the heat in summer and the cold in the winter.



Home-Made Concrete Milk House.

WHERE HOLSTEINS ORIGINATED.

Brief History of This Type of Dairy Animal.

The cattle known in America as Holstein-Friesians belong to the short horn, low-land race, native to the low-lying, fertile lands of Europe bordering on the North Sea, of which race, from the dairy standpoint, the Holstein-Friesian family is the most highly developed. These cattle might have been better named Friesian, since Friesland, and the neighboring provinces of Holland, is the central home from which this breed of cattle has been so widely disseminated over the old world, and from which some 10,000 head of foundation stock has been brought to America. The Friesian people are among the most conservative of the Germanic race, still holding to and speaking among themselves the old Friesian language, although also able to speak Dutch, the official language of Holland. They have been equally conservative in holding to their ancient industry of cattle rearing, an occupation for which their low-lying lands are especially fitted, and, as the Roman historian Tacitus speaks of them nearly 1,900 years ago as cattle breeders, paying a tribute in cattle and hides to the Roman empire, so we find them to-day making dairy husbandry their main industry. Holding mainly to one occupation down through the centuries, and passing the business from father to son, it would be strange indeed, says Farmers' Review, if their breed of cattle did not reach a very high degree of development; so it is in no way surprising that we should find these Friesian dairymen possessed of a breed of cattle which, as an all-around dairy breed, is superior to any other breed known.

DAIRY NOTES.

Never use musty or dirty litter.

We are often inclined to mistake lack of "gumption" for "hard luck."

Keep the stable and dairy room in good condition, fresh air, dry and clean.

The imitation gives just as good satisfaction as the genuine as long as a difference is not known.

Good judgment is of more value than either knowledge or skill, although each is desirable.

When calves are fed skim milk it should be warmed to blood heat before giving or it may cause scours.

If every person were to receive credit for intentions instead of actions, many a one would be judged differently than under the present plan.

FEEDING THE DAIRY CALF.

Careful Attention Needed to Produce a Strong, Profitable Cow.

One of the most delicate operations, and one that requires the closest and most careful attention on the part of the dairyman or the breeder of dairy cattle, is the feeding of the dairy calf. It has been well said that on the first 18 months or two years of the calf's life does its future usefulness depend, says the Farmer's Guide. We want to go just a little farther than this and say to all who are raising calves for the dairy business, whether it be to make butter, cheese, selling whole milk or cream, or supplying a condensing factory or creamery; raise calves from strictly dairy breed of cattle. If you have not the pure bred cows, get yourself at least a pure bred sire of good breeding and the better record his dam has the better he is; that is the better will his calves be. Now, whichever breed you choose, stick to it and don't go to trying crosses, or you lose money. If you select a Jersey sire at first, stick to the Jerseys, and you will soon have a profitable, well-bred and nice-looking herd. The same is true with the Guernseys and Holsteins.

The cow should be well fed when she is carrying the calf. That is, before the calf is born, so that the calf may be well nourished and the cow return a good margin over the expense of feed and care. When the calf is born, place it and its dam in a clean, dry, well-bedded place and in a comfortable temperature not below 50 degrees F. It is a good plan to let the calf stay with its dam for the first 48 hours. The first milk, or colostrum, is very necessary for the calf as it acts as a physic and cleans its bowels. After the first 48 hours the calf may be removed and fed by hand (after it has been taught to drink) and this, with some calves, is no small undertaking. It takes patience and perseverance, for it is very necessary that the calf has the regular amount of milk twice a day, hence the starving-it-to-it proposition don't go, although one may be tempted to let it go till it will drink. Three pounds of milk, twice a day, is enough for the first week or even two. Care must be taken to see that the milk is warm and the buckets always clean and sweet. If you see to this and have a dry, clean, well-lighted and bedded place for the calf you will never be troubled with calf scours. After the calf is two weeks old it can take four pounds of milk twice a day. This milk should be weighed every time and they will never drink too much. A pair of spring balances hung in a convenient place will solve this problem.

As soon as the calf will eat it should have all the oats and bran it will eat as well as bright clover hay. There is nothing that will take the place of oats for young calves raised for the dairy. Water should also be provided for the calves at all times. It is a good plan to have a large bucket to set before them all the time and they will never drink too much at one time. After the calf is six weeks old it may be changed to warm, sweet skim milk. If you have a hand separator, this is the ideal way to raise a calf. It should not fall off in flesh or stop growing at all, nor will it, if you give it good care. It is well to add a little oil meal to the skim milk when the change is made. The change should also be made gradually, as half a pound of skim milk replaces so much whole milk, till the change is completed.

In feeding oil meal one should not feed too much at first. Just a little pinch and increase to a small handful. The skim milk can be increased as the calf grows older, so that a six-months-old calf may take seven or eight pounds at a feed. Silage may be added to the ration at six months old and bran take the place of oats entirely, because of its being cheaper. It is the good, liberal feeder that makes money in the dairy business. It is well, however, to figure so as to feed as cheap a ration as possible as long as it is good.

HOW RECORDS HELP.

Farmer Can More Intelligently Determine From Which Cows to Breed.

If a dairy farmer has at his command carefully kept statistics concerning the yields of his cows, he is in a much better position to decide from which cows it is advisable that he should rear than the farmer who has not that definite information at hand. For, assuming that a heifer-calf is brought up in an orthodox manner, two factors control its eventual usefulness as a dairy cow, namely, the quantity and the quality of the milk produced by its ancestors. The fact that a good (quantity) milker is but rarely bred from a poor milker, and that a heavy milking dam is likely to produce a good milking offspring, has long been realized, but the fact that a poor quality producing cow invariably impresses upon her progeny the same failing is a point that is often overlooked. The truth of both these rules cannot be too strongly emphasized. They hold true, not only direct from female to female, but also from female through male to female. There are quite as many reasons why record of quality should be kept, as there are for the keeping of records of quantity, and there is every reason for keeping both.

We must conclude that the sluggish spirited, dull eyed man must have a poor chance in this world when we remember that even the old cow must have a bright eye and a highly strung nervous system in order to be a success.

Tribute to Baseball by Supreme Justice Harlan

Well-Known Jurist, 74 Years Old, Plays in Game and Wins by Making a Home Run.

In a recent baseball contest in Washington between two local teams the score was tied in the last half of the ninth inning. With two strikes and three balls on him, Harlan hit one over the center fielder's head, and before the ball could be returned to the plate he had made a home run. This would have been an exploit worth while for any player, but it attains to the marvelous when it becomes known that the Harlan who made this winning drive is a man 74 years old, no less a person than Justice Harlan, of the United States supreme court.

Harlan, like Senator Gorman, Judge McPherson and former Gov. Pattison, of Pennsylvania, was a ball player in the early days of the national game, and no absorption in statecraft and legal lore has sufficed to take his mind completely off his favorite sport. Hence, when, at the annual shad-bake of the Washington Bar association, it was proposed to have a baseball game, Justice Harlan was one of the first to volunteer as a player. In making his home run, Harlan had to run every inch of the way. His was not the experience of the hitter who knocks a ball over the fence and has only to jog around the bases to get the credit for it. His hit was within the ground, and to make the circuit before it got to the plate he had to go. That he was able to do so shows that there is plenty of agility in the veteran yet.

The average citizen, remembering the old axiom about a sound mind in a sound body, will be ready to have more faith in the mental workings of a man who has kept his body young, despite the passing of time. Far from detracting from the dignity of the distinguished incumbent of the supreme court seat, the ability of Harlan as a hitter will add to it. That home run is a human touch, a specimen of Americanism that will go far toward popularizing the venerable judge. How Theodore Roosevelt, who instinctively seems to know how to do the thing that pleases the people, came to overlook the diamond and its opportunities is a mystery.

NATIONAL LEAGUE NEWS

The Cincinnati club has turned Pitcher Bill Essick back to the Portland club.

The Cincinnati club is reported as negotiating with St. Louis for Pitcher Charles Brown.

President Dovey has scouts out on the trail for two good catchers. That's a scarce article.

Big Dan Brouthers thinks that the New York Giants have the best staff of pitchers in the country.

Burke, the outfielder that McGraw turned over to Boston, is making a very favorable impression.

Up to May 15 Christy Mathewson had won 155 victories in the National league and had met defeat 83 times.

It is stated that McGraw has given up his billiard room at Broadway and Forty-second street, New York city.

Brooklyn has released Pitcher McLane, formerly with Fordham, to Wilmington, the tail-ender of the Tri-State league.

Lobert is without doubt one of the greatest finds of the last two years, and reminds one very much of our old friend Herman Long.

Manager Hanlon, of Cincinnati, states most emphatically that he is not thinking of either trading Mike Mowrey or returning him to the Eastern league, whence he came.

Cantillon's Career as an Indicator Wielder

Two Stories About the Umpiring Days of the Washington Club's New Manager.

Manager Lajoie, of Cleveland, has a fund of stories about Joe Cantillon's career as an umpire. Here are a couple: "Philadelphia was playing Washington one day and Win Mercer was pitching for the Senators. We scored about eight runs in the first four innings, when Cantillon, who was umpiring, happened to give Washington the worst of a close decision at second base. As Cantillon came back to the pitcher's box Mercer protested the decision. 'I suppose, Joe, you gave it as you saw it, but to see the play properly you were in the wrong position.' 'Judging from the looks of the score board, Win, you have been in the wrong position ever since the game started,' retorted Joe. Another day Joe put Harry Davis out of the game and Davis at once slammed his glove to the bench and started to follow it. 'Come back here,' yelled Cantillon. 'Get your glove and go back to first base. You are too blamed willing to quit.'

"Joe during his last year as an umpire entertained a grudge against Lew Criger. We were playing at Boston one day, and with Joe umpiring. It was agreed that in case of a line drive going along the foul line the catcher then working should call whether it went foul or fair, inasmuch as the umpire when standing behind the pitcher could not have a good view. Well, the game went along to the seventh inning. Fultz led off with a single and Dick Cooley followed with a three-bagger along the right foul line. Fultz scored, and as Cooley pulled up at third Criger yelled, 'Foul.'

"Well, that settled it, we failed to score, and Boston won in the fourteenth inning. But that night the Boston right fielder and Nig Cuppy told Cantillon that the ball was hit a foot and a half fair. He never could forgive Criger, and I'll bet that Criger never drew anything but strikes when he was at bat and Cantillon was umpiring. One day Criger made an awful kick about a strike that Cantillon called on him, but all the satisfaction he received was this shot: 'It was a foul ball, was it?'

"'Won't you ever forget that?' asked Criger.

"'Not in 1,000 years,' replied Cantillon."

MINOR LEAGUE DOINGS

Capt. Whitmore has resigned as captain of the Wisconsin baseball team to play professional ball with the Madison State league team.

The Bloomington management is trying to strengthen and has secured a new outfielder by the name of Donavan. Donavan was formerly with Evansville and is said to be a good sticker.

Grover Lowdermilk, a young college man, six feet four inches tall, and a pitcher, has been signed by Manager Reed, of Decatur.

Roxy Walters is not a shining light as a manager. His team at Green Bay is at the bottom of the heap in the Wisconsin league.

The Waterbury club, of the Connecticut league, has released infielder Charles McEaroe and outfielder Curtiss.

Outfielder Jimmy Hart, of the Minneapolis club, has been signed as manager of the Sioux City (Western league) club.

The Cleveland club is reported as having secured to a contract the signature of Deschon, the star pitcher of Cornell college.

A WONDERFUL GAIN.

A Utah Pioneer Tells a Remarkable Story.

J. W. Browning, 1011 22d St., Ogden, Utah, a pioneer who crossed the plains in 1848, says: "Five years ago the doctors said I had diabetes. My kidneys were all out of order, I had to rise often at night, looked sallow, felt dull and listless and had lost 40 pounds. My back ached and I had spells of rheumatism and dizziness. Doan's Kidney Pills relieved me of these troubles and have kept me well for a year past. Though 75 years old, I am in good health."

Great Cricketer's Simple Tribute to His Own Worth.

In 1885 there was a great celebration in London in honor of Dr. Samuel Johnson, and among those in attendance was the Australian "crack" cricketer, Bonner, then at the height of his fame.

As one of the guests, says the compiler of the recently published "Letters" of the late Dr. George Birkbeck Hill, Bonner's health was proposed. His response was noteworthy.

"After seeing the way in which Dr. Johnson's memory is revered," he said, with great simplicity, "I am not sure that I would not rather have been such a man than have gained my own greatest triumphs in cricket."—Youth's Companion.

SORES AS BIG AS PENNIES.

Whole Head and Neck Covered—Hair All Came Out—Cured in Three Weeks by Cuticura.

"After having the measles my whole head and neck were covered with scaly sores about as large as a penny. They were just as thick as they could be. My hair all came out. I let the trouble run along, taking the doctor's blood remedies and rubbing on salve, but it did not seem to get any better. It stayed that way for about six months; then I got a set of the Cuticura Remedies, and in about a week I noticed a big difference, and in three weeks it was well entirely and I have not had the trouble any more, and as this was seven years ago, I consider myself cured. Mrs. Henry Porter, Albion, Neb., Aug. 25, 1906."

HOW HE BROKE A RECORD.

Took Last Jump from Forgotten Rubber Home Plate.

Billy Powell, greatest hurdler the west has produced, was referring to his college days on the Berkeley track.

"There were five in the race. I drew the extreme outside lane, which gave me a bad finish stretch. But I got a peach of a start, swept the curve like a yacht on her beam ends and came down the straight taking the jumps in beautiful style. I felt I had a varsity record in me at that clip, and I threw all my power into the final strides. Springing for the ninth hurdle I fairly flew through the air, and, dashing to the finish, broke the tape, the world's record for the low hurdles, for the 220-dash, and for the running broad jump, the time being 21 flat, and my last jump over two hurdles at once, clearing 43 feet and some inches.

"Whew!" exclaimed Olle Snedigar, "why weren't the records ever allowed?"

"Well," continued Powell, "when they went to measure that leap, Col. Edwards started to shove his cane in, to indicate my foremost spike mark, and the stick jumped out of his hand. They scraped the short grass away and found a solid rubber home plate imbedded where the varsity battery used to practice."—San Francisco Chronicle.

CHILDREN SHOWED IT

Effect of Their Warm Drink in the Morning.

"A year ago I was a wreck from coffee drinking and was on the point of giving up my position in the school room because of nervousness.

"I was telling a friend about it and she said, 'We drink nothing at meal time but Postum Food Coffee, and it is such a comfort to have something we can enjoy drinking with the children.'

"I was astonished that she would allow the children to drink any kind of coffee, but she said Postum was the most healthful drink in the world for children as well as for older ones, and that the condition of both the children and adults showed that to be a fact.

"My first trial was a failure. The cook boiled it four or five minutes and it tasted so flat that I was in despair but determined to give it one more trial. This time we followed the directions and boiled it fifteen minutes after the boiling began. It was a decided success and I was completely won by its rich delicious flavour. In a short time I noticed a decided improvement in my condition and kept growing better and better month after month, until now I am perfectly healthy, and do my work in the school room with ease and pleasure. I would not return to the nerve-destroying regular coffee for any money."

"There's a Reason." Read the famous little "Health Classic," "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

A Sad Mistake.

In my father's native village lives Mr. S., a very deaf old man. During the summer months he lets his spare rooms to some of the many pleasure-seekers who frequent the place, says a Boston Herald writer, and one day last summer, while Mr. S. was in his garden, a young man of the village chanced by, and the following conversation took place:

"Good morning, Mr. S."

"Mewnin'."

"You've got your house full of boarders this summer."

Mr. S. was picking potato bugs off from his plants, but he managed to stop long enough to answer, "Yes."

"Some nice looking young ladies among them," continued the young man.

Mr. S. stood up and eyed the potatoes critically, then answered:

"Well, they'd ought to look purty good. I just picked two quarts of bugs off 'em."

Stolen Naps.

"How do you like that office boy I sent around?" asked the banker.

"Don't think much of him," replied the broker. "He isn't wide awake."

"But you told me the last office boy you engaged was too forward and you wanted one who was retiring."

"Yes, but this one is too retiring. Every time I slip out for a few hours I find that he retires on top of the big safe and snores until I return."

CREAM SHIPPERS

The wide-awake farmer who has cream to dispose of, naturally wants to sell it to the best advantage. It is a fact that some creameries pay more than others, and the reason is that some market their butter better and realize more out of it than others. All creameries have to sell their butter and the one that makes good butter and has an established trade realizes more out of it and consequently can pay the farmer more for his cream.

We have been in business nineteen years and have a reputation for making the finest butter, and get a better price the year around than any creamery in the Northwest, consequently we can do better by you than any other creamery can.

This summer we have contracted with a large packer for all the butter we can make above what we use for our retail trade at a BIG PRICE so we can afford to pay big prices all summer and we are going to do it.

If you are a cream shipper and are not already on our books we invite you to start at once and keep on all summer right through till fall, and we can promise you larger returns for your cream than you ever got during the summer before.

Don't pass this by as an ordinary advertisement, we mean it, and mean every word of it.

We pay spot cash for every can as it comes in. No delay, no waiting. For every can you ship the money goes to you by return mail. You know what your cream is bringing you each day. We guarantee safe return of all empty cans.

MOTHERHOOD

MRS. JAMES CHESTER

The first requisite of a good mother is good health, and the experience of maternity should not be approached without careful physical preparation, as a woman who is in good physical condition transmits to her children the blessings of a good constitution.

Preparation for healthy maternity is accomplished by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which is made from native roots and herbs, more successfully than by any other medicine because it gives tone and strength to the entire feminine organism, curing displacements, ulceration and inflammation, and the result is less suffering and more children healthy at birth. For more than thirty years has been the standby of American mothers in preparing for childbirth.

Note what Mrs. James Chester, of 427 W. 35th St., New York says in this letter:—Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—"I wish every expectant mother knew about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. A neighbor who had learned of its great value at this trying period of a woman's life urged me to try it and I did so, and I cannot say enough in regard to the good it did me. I recovered quickly and am in the best of health now."

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is certainly a successful remedy for the peculiar weaknesses and ailments of women.

It has cured almost every form of Female Complaints, Dragging Sensations, Weak Back, Falling and Displacements, Inflammation, Ulcerations and Organic Diseases of Women and is invaluable in preparing for Childbirth and during the Change of Life.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free.

EVERYTHING READY

Everything is in Readiness for the Biggest Time of Northern Minnesota Firemen's History.

With the weather man doing even a fair stunt at behaving himself next week, Red Lake Falls will be the scene of one of the biggest of the big celebrations ever held in Northern Minnesota, and there is nothing more asked for than good weather to satisfy the most particular.

On Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday next the thirteenth annual Tournament of the Northern Minnesota Firemen's Tournament Association will be on in full blast in this city, and that the firemen and crowds that accompany them will be right royally entertained is a dead sure conclusion.

Not in the territory embraced by the association is there another town so ideally situated for a tournament of this sort, and were it not for the fact that custom makes it necessary to pass this tournament around, Red Lake Falls would be the ideal spot for a permanent place for holding these annual gatherings. Situated as it is in the woods and among the hills, with beautiful streams of water flowing directly through the city, with numerous inviting shady spots ever at hand, with a people noted far and wide for their hospitality, with a program of exciting events calculated to please all, it is easy to expect that the people of the north country will not pass up this opportunity to have the time of their lives, and from all information at hand it is reasonable to expect one of the largest turnouts in the history of the association.

Crookston will send their running team, ball team and a large delegation of fun lovers. Warren is coming with a band, team, and a big bunch of citizens who are anxious to show us that they appreciated the big turn out Red Lake Falls gave them last year. Thief River Falls will come with a running team, and as they are the bidders for next year's tournament it is highly probable that they will send a big representation of citizens.

Bemidji and Hallock are also expected to send teams and big crowds of people, and there will surely be a jolly crowd of firemen. Aside from the teams there is St. Hilaire, Fertile, McIntosh, Fosston, Ada, Middle River, Greenbush and many other tributary points that will contribute to the crowd of sightseers, and unless all signs fail there will be people enough to keep things moving along in good shape.

And Red Lake Falls is anticipating a big crowd. The big grand stand at the race track is ready for occupancy, the grounds are in fine shape, the track and ball grounds have been given finishing touches, and while there are a lot of minor details to be looked after yet, Red Lake Falls is practically resting on its oars waiting for the tournament dates. Down town all is bustle getting in shape. Several lunch counters are being fixed up, the decorations have already been commenced and by Monday next week will also be all done, ready for the crowd of merry-makers. Several of the churches will serve meals during tournament week. The Presbyterian ladies will serve in the [illegible] building next to the post office, while St. Mary's society will serve in the Woodman hall. These societies are both known for their serving abilities and will no doubt both be well patronized. Aside from these there will be many eating houses and none will be let go hungry. The committee in charge has secured a large number of good rooms and an information bureau will be run for the accommodation of visitors.

There is not a detail but what has been looked after and all that is needed now is to touch the button and send the ball rolling on its merry way.

The official program for the four days is as follows:

HUNT AN-EATING TIGERS.

Sportsmen Face Many Dangers In Shooting Ferocious Beast.

Men who shot the "big cats of the Indian jungle" all emphasize the difference between an "ordinary tiger" and a man eater." One varies from the other as much as a domestic pussy from a wildcat. The man-eater, when it catches sight of a hunter is at once all aflame with the passion to devour him. It has tasted human flesh and knows its sweetness.

When the Britisher in India goes tiger hunting, therefore, he looks first of all to his own safety. Having learned that a tiger rarely looks upward, he seeks a position at some distance from the ground, as, for instance the howdah of an elephant, or a machan or leaf-covered box in a tree.

The tiger usually keeps its eyes on the ground because it finds its prey there and its enemies also. The natural inhabitants of the trees, the birds and the monkeys, it holds in contempt. But on the ground, besides the sweet-fleshed man, lives the water buffalo, its most formidable foe. In combat the buffalo most times kills the tiger.

The peculiar sagacity of the elephant is of great assistance to the man who hunts tigers from the howdah. At the approach of the big cat the pachyderm trumpets an alarm, and if properly trained it will snatch its master with its trunk, should he be on the ground, and lift him into the howdah on its back. It then seeks the shadow of some tree and stands perfectly still, as if knowing that this way it will steady the hunter's aim.

When one shoots tigers from the machan or tree ambush he usually picks a place where the beast is wont to retreat when alarmed. With a companion he hides himself in his nest. In his hand he holds a magazine rifle loaded and cocked, while in his belt he carries a half dozen pistols for instant use should the gun fail him. Then he sends out a score or more of natives as beaters to drive the beast toward him. Encircling the region, the beaters begin to rap on the trees and to shout, and these noises, because of their strangeness, frighten the animal.

PINEAPPLES.

The Juice of This Fruit Is a Great Aid to Digestion.

The word enzyme does not appear to have any connection with pineapple, yet it is the name of the chemical that gives to the luscious fruit the remarkably digestible property which it possesses. The prevailing notion that pineapple juice is excellent for the digestion is supported by medical testimony. Eat a slice of the fruit after dinner, say the doctors, and you will not suffer from dyspepsia.

If you want to see what pineapple can accomplish in the way of digestion, you can easily test it on a piece of raw steak. The action of pineapple juice on meat is to transform it into jelly and then dissolve it when in the human stomach.

Place a slice of the fruit on the raw meat as it lies on a plate, and the upper surface of the steak where the fruit touches it will soon become gelatinous. Enzyme, the active principle of the juice, can be obtained by throwing salt into the juice, thus producing a precipitate.

A good sized pineapple contains two pints of juice, a fact that gives an idea of what a slice of the fruit will do for digestion. If cooked, the pineapple loses its virtue in this respect. It may be asked whether the consumption of the somewhat woody fruit itself is beneficial or not, for that can scarcely be easily digestible.

Without doubt it is the juice which does the good, not the flesh of the pineapple, but the property of the juice is so effective that the eating of the fruit itself can do no harm and may even be beneficial, inasmuch as it takes some of the strength of the juice to dissolve it and so prevents the stomach suffering from the too violent effects of the juice.

Fighting the Current.

Papua has swift streams well stocked with fish. An explorer tells of Papuan fresh water mullet which sometimes weigh as much as fifteen pounds. "These fish are wonderfully provided by nature with an appliance which helps them to combat the extraordinary currents. At one moment you will see them being swept down resistlessly, but suddenly they shoot off into the quieter water and attach themselves to the rocks by a strong sucker near the mouth. There they hang just outside the current, their tails moving gently with it, and when they have recovered their strength they make another dash through the swifter waters."

Observance of the Sabbath.

There was the minister of Tweedsmuir who on a certain Sabbath found a salmon stranded in shallow water and who, being unable conscientiously to take it out on such a day, built a hedge of stones around it and, returning on the morrow, claimed his prize. There was the old farmer who could not go to the kirk because he had neglected to shave on the Saturday night, and he would not profane the day by the use of any edged tool.—Macmillan's Magazine.

A True Fish Story.

Here is a fish story told by a British nobleman: An Irishman had caught a big pike. Noting a lump in its stomach, he cut it open. "As I cut it open there was a mighty rush and a flapping of wings, and away flew a wild duck, and when I looked inside there was a nest, with four eggs, and she had been after sitting on that nest."

Shocking Precocity.

"What is the result," asked the teacher of the primary class in arithmetic, "when you put two and two together?"

"A kith," lisped the curly headed little girl in the front row.—Chicago Tribune.

There are many diversities of vice, but it is one never failing effect of it to live displeased and discontented.—Seneca.

THE GOLDFINCH.

Changes In Plumage That Are Puzzling to the Novice.

Most every one in America is acquainted with the goldfinch, but many people know the bird by the name of lettuce bird on account of its bright yellow color. Goldfinch is a very appropriate name, as the bright yellow of the male when in breeding plumage is like burnished gold. The female goldfinch is more modestly dressed than her mate. The changes in plumage of the male are very interesting and to the novice somewhat puzzling. Until the student becomes acquainted with the bird he may wonder why he sees no males during the winter. The truth is at this season the flocks of supposed female goldfinches are really of both sexes, the male bird having assumed in the previous fall, usually by the end of October, a plumage closely resembling that of the female and young bird of the year. The male retains this inconspicuous dress until late in February, when one can notice a gradual change taking place in some of the birds. This renewal of feathers is actively continued through March and April, and by the first of May our resplendent bird is with us again. The song period with the male goldfinch continues as long as he wears his gold and black livery, for it commences as early as the middle of March and ends late in August. Goldfinches are very cleanly in their habits and bathe frequently. Their nests are exquisite pieces of bird architecture, the inside being lined with the softest plant down. The mother bird is the builder, her handsome consort during the nest building time devoting most of his efforts to singing to cheer his industrious mate.—Philadelphia Press.

THE SOLAR SYSTEM.

Some Facts Which Give an Idea of Its Immensity.

In all the heavens, with the exception of passing meteors or meteorites, not one body occupies a position closer to earth than the moon, which is some 240,000 miles away—very far, of course, side by side with any earthly distances, but a mere fraction side by side with other astronomical distances. Next to the moon our nearest occasional neighbor is Venus, and then Mars. Both Venus and Mars, however, are often farther away from us than the sun, which remains always at somewhere about the same distance, roughly at from 90,000,000 to 93,000,000 miles.

This dividing space between sun and earth is of great importance in thinking about the stars, and it should be clearly impressed upon the mind. Next to the sun in point of nearness come the more distant planets—Jupiter, which is about five times as far from the sun as our earth is; Saturn, nearly twice as far as Jupiter; Uranus, nearly twice as far as Saturn, and Neptune, nearly three times as far as Saturn. All these planets belong to our sun, all are members of his family, all are part of the solar system. The size of the solar system as a whole, consisting thus of the sun and his planets, including our earth, may be fairly well grasped by any one taking the trouble to master two simple facts. They are these, that our earth is roughly about 92,000,000 miles away from the sun and that Neptune, the outermost planet of the solar system, is nearly thirty times as far distant from the sun as our earth is.—Chambers' Journal.

AN ODD BIRD.

The Kiwi of New Zealand Has Some Remarkable Peculiarities.

That queer bird, the kiwi, is a native of New Zealand. Its remarkable peculiarities are, first, the apparent absence of wings, as the plumage so covers the small, rudimentary, sticklike appendage of a wing that none whatever is apparent. The situation of the nostrils at the bill's extremity is a second peculiar feature. While hunting for earthworms it probes the soft ground, making a continual snuffing sound. Thus the scent is evidently of great help in finding food and the reason for the position of the nostrils quite apparent.

A third peculiarity is the very disproportionate size of the egg in comparison to the bird, it being a little less than one-fourth the bird's own weight. One kiwi's egg found weighed fourteen and one-half ounces, while the bird weighed just under four pounds (sixty-four ounces) and was about the size of an ordinary hen.

The plumage of the kiwi is a dull brown streaked with light gray, and the body resembles a miniature bay shock, rather badly hacked off at the rear part, as nature has not provided the kiwi with such decoration as a tail. The absence of wings is compensated for by its swiftness of foot, and the large, clumsy looking legs, which are sometimes used as weapons, are placed far back on the oddly shaped body.—St. Nicholas.

That Was All.

A young girl who is always trying some new thing was present once when the doctor set a neighbor's broken arm. She was sure that she knew exactly how it was done and rather anxious to put her new knowledge into practice. Some time later a hen out in the chicken yard broke its leg. The girl directly announced that she meant to set it "and make it as good as new." Accordingly it was put into a plaster cast and left for the proper length of time to knit. When the day came to take off the cast the girl ran out to the henhouse in great eagerness to see the result. Presently there was a scream that brought every member of the family to her side. The chicken was jumping miserably over the ground sidewise instead of directly forward. You know a hen's leg has a crook. Well, she had crooked it the wrong way, that was all.

Aliens In Old London.

Here is a curious report of the aliens in London in the year 1567: "There being a great increase of foreigners in the city, her majesty ordered the lord mayor to take the name, quality and profession of all strangers residing within the city of London." The list was headed by the item, "Scots, 40." Other nations were represented by "French, 428; Spaniards and Portuguese, 45; Italians, 140; Dutch, 2,030; Burgundians, 44; Danes, 2; Liegeois, 1."

Shark's Tail For Luck.

Attached to the extreme end of the bowsprit of a sailing vessel there may sometimes be seen a piece of some material that looks remarkably like leather. This seeming piece of leather is really a shark's tail. It is placed there because the sailors think that it augurs good luck, believing that pleasant voyages will be their lot while it remains there. Instead of the bowsprit the tail is at times nailed to the top of one of the masts.—London King.

Different.

"Why don't you elope with her?"

"But, good gracious, man, if you are perfectly willing for me to marry your daughter I cannot see any object to be attained by our eloping."

"Can't you? How will it be if I offer you half of what I save on the wedding?"—Houston Post.

The Main Point.

"What do you think? That boss politician says he has divorced himself from politics."

"Then I'll bet he secured alimony."—Baltimore American.

Common sense in an uncommon degree is what the world calls wisdom.—Coleridge.

At the Metropolitan opera house next Thursday night will occur the annual commencement exercises of St. Joseph's parochial school of this city, at which time fifteen young people will finish their labors at this institution of learning in a program that will be extremely interesting.

In the morning of that day a matinee will be given at 10 o'clock for children only, and at the evening exercises at 8 o'clock no children will be admitted unless accompanied by their parents. No admission fee will be charged at either entertainment.

St. Joseph's school has been very successful since its foundation four years ago and during that time has graduated several large classes. The success of the school can be attributed in a large measure to the Rev. Father Fayolle who has labored earnestly in behalf of the institution. The father has been very insistent upon securing the best teachers that can be obtained and the work done speaks for itself.

Tommy Johnstone on Deck.

Tommy Johnstone of Crookston is here, of course. If there was a firemen's tournament within four hundred miles and the genial Tom heard of it it is a dead cinch he would be at the scene of action. There is no more enthusiastic fireman in Minnesota than this same Johnstone, and a tourney wouldn't seem right unless he was present. He is officiating as timekeeper and judge at the races, and knows the individual members of the different teams so well that he can almost tell the time of the race before the runners reach the line. Tom is there with the goods wherever you put him and will always be given the glad hand when he visits Red Lake Falls.

No Hardships.

Adrian Democrat: On account of the two-cent rate, it is said, the railroads are now planning on reducing the speed of their trains, as it is a settled fact that a slow train can be operated much cheaper than a fast one. Well, the travelling public will not be disposed to kick. A slow train on time is better than a fast one two hours late. All the difference will be we will spend a little more time on the road rather than waste our time waiting around stations.

GOT A HORSE THIEF

Sheriffs From McLain and McHenry Counties Make Important Capture.

Late last night in this city Sheriff John A. Beck, of Washburn, McLain county, North Dakota, and Sheriff Javnagr, of McHenry county, nabbed a badly wanted member of a gang of horse thieves that has been operating in their state for several months past, and the fellow is now lodged in the county jail here awaiting a trip back to North Dakota to answer to this serious charge.

The fellow goes by the name of George E. Gray, and he had been in town since early yesterday morning. He came down from Thief River Falls in an automobile and was doing a rushing business hauling people to and fro from the grounds and about the city. It appears that he rented the automobile at Thief River and had no idea that he was being tracked.

The North Dakota sheriffs had been on his trail for several months and got track of him early this week and when they arrived here last evening his capture was an easy matter. Grey is a member of a very bad gang of crooks that has been carrying on high-handed robbery in that part of North Dakota for a year past, and the officers out there hope to round them all up before very long.

Mermaids In History.

Nearly all nations have folk-lore and fairy-tale accounts of mermaids, and some times of mermen. Even the American Indians had their "woman-fish" and "man-fish." The Chinese tell stories about their sea-women of the Southern seas. Sometimes mermaids and mermen are represented as leaving the water and living with human beings, but more frequently they are pictured as being so attractive that they sometimes will lure human beings to destruction in the depths of the sea. These myths have been utilized by many poets, and have even been used for stories "with a moral."

THIRTEENTH TOURNEY ON IN RED LAKE FALLS

Minnesota Historical Society

Ideal Weather and Big Crowds Help Make This one of the Biggest Affairs in the History of the Association---Warren Wins the Banner.

The thirteenth annual tournament of the Northern Minnesota Firemen's association is on in earnest and thanks to the graces of the weather man who gladly joined Jupiter Pluvius in giving Red Lake Falls the best of weather for the four days celebration, the meet is proving one of the best in the history of the association.

The tournament opened in earnest Tuesday morning, although the crowd began coming Monday afternoon and up to the time of going to press there is every evidence that the big crowds are thoroughly enjoying themselves.

The fun started at train time Tuesday when the Red Lake Falls band and firemen marched to the Great Northern train to meet the first contingent of visitors. The crowd on the early train was not large, but Crookston and Thief River Falls were fairly well represented from the fact that their ball teams were to meet that afternoon. At eleven thirty the crowd was led to the Metropolitan opera house where for an hour they listened to music and speaking. Hon. Halvor Steenerson, congressman of the ninth congressional district, was introduced by Mayor Duffy in a few well chosen remarks, and spoke very entertainingly for a half hour. Congressman Steenerson has a happy faculty of always pleasing his audience and he was given a rousing reception. The congressman was followed by Thomas Johnstone of Crookston, treasurer of the association, and one of the most enthusiastic firemen in the state. Tommy is always at his best when it comes to talking at a fireman's tournament and he pleased the hearers immensely with his apt remarks. Mr. Johnstone has attended every tournament ever held in the valley and is having the time of his life in Red Lake Falls at this meeting.

After dinner the band led the crowd to the ball grounds, where the game between Crookston and Thief River Falls was the attraction of the afternoon. Crookston was strengthened by three Red Lake Falls players, Harry Healy, Verne Healy and Norman Schreiter while Thief River River had six Mahnomen Indians helping them. Brown, the Crookston twirler, pitched the whole game and held the Thief River team down very nicely. Lofkins, who essays to twirl for the up-river boys on specific occasions, was in the box for Thief River and before he was convinced of his failure as a pitcher five Crookstonites had circled the bases. The Mahnomen pitcher was then put in, and after that only one Crook got to home base. The Thief River team got three runs during the game, the final score being 6 to 3 in favor of Crookston. Lizce, the Argyle southpaw, umpired the contest and gave excellent satisfaction.

After the ball game the band and crowd marched to the evening Great Northern train to meet the Warren and Thief River Falls delegations, and the crowd that poured off the train showed that the people of the Red River valley were anxious to see Red Lake Falls. After the Warren boys had been assigned to quarters the rest of the time until supper was spent in friendly greetings and sight seeing by the visitors. After supper the Red Lake Falls Concert band gave a concert of an hour on Main street and the Mahara minstrel show was the attraction of the evening. The minstrels are better this year than ever, and the big crowd that attended the Tuesday evening performance was very well satisfied. A social dance was held after the show, the minstrel orchestra furnishing the music.

Wednesday morning at eight thirty a special train from Greenbush was met, and on it were nearly a thousand people from Thief River Falls and the towns on the north line. They were escorted up town by the Warren and Red Lake Falls bands and soon mingled with the crowds until parade time. The parade feature at eleven o'clock was a "daisy" in bowery parlance and presented a very striking appearance. The fire engine led and in the parade were nearly three hundred firemen and band men. The formation of the parade was follows: Red Lake Falls fire engine and company; Warren band, executive committee, Warren fire department, Crookston fire department, Red Lake Falls band, Thief River Falls fire department, Hallock fire department, Bemidji delegates, St. Hilaire delegates, Mahara's minstrel band, Red Lake Falls fire department. The line of march was up Second street to Champagne avenue, north to first street, east to main, down main to River street, up again to sixth street west to Champagne avenue, north to Third street east to main and back to the city hall. The parade line was crowded with people and the cheers for their favorites were numerous and prolonged. The judges were stationed on the Grand View hotel porch and the parade prizes were awarded as follows. For the largest number of men in line (Red Lake Falls barred) Thief River Falls first with thirty-six; for the team presenting the best appearance, Warren first. After the parade a grand "wind-up" of the men in line was made and the applause was very pronounced.

After dinner the first races were held at the race grounds west of town, and the big grand stand was full of people anxious to see the opening contests.

Warren Wins the Championship Banner.

The first race was the association hose race for the championship banner and prizes. Thief River Falls run first and made a good run and coupling, their time being 23-2-5. Crookston run next and made it in 25-3-5. Warren came next and made it in 23 flat. Red Lake Falls run last and in some way the hose got loose and their trial was a fluke giving first place and the banner to Warren, second place to Thief River Falls and third place to Crookston.

The coupling contest was won by Lesarge, Thief River Falls, in 4 2-5; Cahill, Thief River Falls, second, 4 3-5; Harris, Crookston, third, 5 flat.

The hundred yard dash for firemen was captured by Staska, of Warren. There were four entries and the race was a pretty one from the start. Staska was behind until near the end when by a brilliant spurt he passed the rest and won the race. Cahill of Thief River Falls got second and Brady, Red Lake Falls, third.

Last evening the Warren band entertained the people with an excellent outdoor concert, after which a big part of the crowd went to the Mahara minstrel show and enjoyed themselves in various ways.

On account of the fact that the greater part of the working force of this paper is connected with band, running team, etc., the paper goes to press Wednesday night and will not give a detailed report of the Thursday and Friday races until next week.

However, the crowd is large and everyone is enjoying themselves to the limit. With the weather for Thursday and Friday as good as it was Tuesday and Wednesday the thirteenth annual tournament will go down in history as one of the greatest successes in the history of the association.

Notes of the Tourney.

Happy is here, too!

Thief River contributed a very large delegation of fun-lovers, and they were all well entertained. But Thief River will be the scene of the 1908 tourney and Red Lake Falls expects to reciprocate—and then some.

Editor J.E. Bouvette, of the Hallock Enterprise, is here with the Hallock boys and as usual is having a good time. Bro. Brouvette has taken in all of the tournaments held by the present association and has come to be a necessary fixture to tournament success.

Bandmaster George Johnson with his fine bunch of band boys, are here from Warren and have contributed in a large measure to the success of the musical part of the program. The Warren band has made a good rep. for itself during the past few years, and the popular George makes new friends for his bunch every day. Warren has reason to be proud of her band fully as much as they have to adore their fire team.

The Warren delegation did a good stunt at jollification in front of the grand stand when they won the banner race yesterday, and for fifteen minutes their band, firemen and citizens executed a "war dance" in the track in front of the grand stand. Their joy at winning the pretty banner knew no bounds, and they were certainly a happy lot. Well, they were a fine lot of boys and the people of Red Lake Falls know of none they would sooner see the banner go to.

The Bemidji running team is not with us this year, greatly to the regret of the other members of the association. Their department is represented by four jolly boys, however, in the persons of Ray Dennis, C. S. Dailey, Gus Gustafson and John Goodman and they are contributing their share of the merry-making. The rest of the "Big Bemidj" bunch are greatly missed this year and all of the firemen hope to see them in the game in 1908.

Word was received here Tuesday that a gang of counterfeiters were operating in this neighborhood and word was quickly passed around to watch for bogus bills. Several bills of small denominations were found that looked bad, and late last night a suspicious character was arrested and lodged in jail to await investigation. The officers are close on the track of these fellows and it is more than likely that the crooked work will be nipped in the bud very shortly.

THE HAYWOOD TRIAL.

The Haywood defense carried the cross-examination of Orchard down to the Steunenberg murder. The witness told of a plot to kidnap the children of a rich miner for ransom and said it was suggested by David Coates, former lieutenant governor of Colorado.

Harry Orchard, on the stand for his sixth day in the Haywood trial, firmly withstood all the attempts of the defense to discredit his story. He denied that the Federation leaders left him without money. He told of a plot to blow up 150 non-union men in Globeville which was stopped by Haywood.

Into the further cross-examination of Harry Orchard counsel for William D. Haywood repeatedly threw the suggestion of a great counter conspiracy, formulated and carried out by the enemies of the Western Federation of Miners, and indicated a determination to construct their main line of defense on that field. Orchard was firm in his denial of this theory.

Counsel for William D. Haywood continued their attack on the testimony of Harry Orchard and centered their strongest assault on the events beginning with the explosion in the Vindicator mine and ending with the earlier meetings between the witness and the leaders of the Federation of Miners in Denver. Orchard stood the test and strain very well and held tenaciously to the story he had related.

DARK KIDNAPING PLOT

ORCHARD TELLS OF SCHEME TO STEAL CHILDREN.

LAYS IT TO DAVID COATES

Explains the Poverty That Drove Him to Mean Crimes—Cross-Examination Reaches Steunenberg Murder.

Boise, Idaho.—The defense Wednesday carried the cross-examination of Harry Orchard down to the actual crime charged against William D Haywood—the murder of Frank Steunenberg—and as it progressed assailed the testimony and the theory of the state resting upon it.

The Steunenberg crime was reached at midday, and counsel for the defense directed their efforts to an attempt to cloud the earlier purposes and movements of Orchard with uncertainty and indefiniteness. Then they emphasized the abandonment of all effort to kill after Orchard first tracked Steunenberg to a hotel in Boise and, with a skeleton key had gained entrance to the very room in which the governor was living. Here they delayed for a moment to prove that Orchard twice wrote and once telephoned to Bill Easterly at Silver City to urge him to come and join in the crime, and the direct implication was that Orchard was endeavoring to inveigle another federation man into the crime which would bring discredit and dishonor to the organization.

Then the Steunenberg crime was temporarily thrust into the background and the witness carried over his long journey into north Idaho, and his crimes there, including the dark plot to kidnap and hold for ransom the Paulson children, were forcefully emphasized. Orchard swore that David Coates, former lieutenant governor of Colorado, and then a publisher in Wallace, Idaho, first suggested the kidnaping to Pettibone and himself at Denver.

Then the defense showed the witness in the commission of a series of mean crimes and reduced to poverty, in which he had to resort to a pawnshop, borrowing and theft to live for a long period.

The defense wanted to know why, if he were in Idaho on a mission of murder for Haywood, Moyer and Pettibone, and with unlimited credit from them, he did not send to them for more money, instead of borrowing and stealing.

Orchard replied that he did send a letter to Moyer at Butte and got $100, but he did not send for more because he was temporarily off the Steunenberg murder errand and away from where Steunenberg lived, and he did not want to send for more money until he could show that he was back to work

Postoffice Robbed.

Twin Valley.—Robbers broke into the postoffice and blew open the safe, getting away with several hundred dollars worth of stamps.

The robbers secured an entrance to the office by breaking the glass in the top part of the back door, which enabled them to put an arm into the aperture and draw the bolts and also turn the knob of a Yale lock which reinforced the double bolt. Using a sledge hammer and a chisel which they secured from a neighboring blacksmith shop, they knocked the dial off the safe, and inserted gunpowder. This was touched off with a fuse and the outer shell of the door was forced off. It was an easy matter to pry open the inner shell that was left, and the contents of the safe, consisting of several hundred dollars' worth of stamps and a small amount of change was taken.

The decision holds that any mayor is under obligation to see that the state laws are enforced. If he fails, the attorney general may sue for civil damages, and may also bring proceedings to have the mayor ousted from office.

The Robinson case was appealed on a demurrer and will now go back to the lower court for trial. Only the civil case will be tried, as Robinson's term as mayor has expired. He is now a member of the state senate.

The last legislature provided an appropriation of $16,000 to buy land, with a suitable maintenance fund, and those interested are looking for a place where the farm may be located. Two or three sites have been looked at, but none has yet been selected.

Mankato.—The injuries which August Koch sustained two or three weeks ago by being caught in a belt and carried around the shaft at the tub factory have resulted fatally. He was forty years old. A widow and one child survive.

Crookston.—William Munch, the deputy game warden for this district arrested Chris Bangen of St. Hilaire, charging him with fishing with a net in the Red Lake river at that place. Bangen was taken before Judge Nelson of St. Hilaire, found guilty, and fined $25 and costs.

Minneapolis.—The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Lindstrom was attacked and bitten by a vicious dog. In trying to protect her child the mother was also bitten. It is thought the girl will recover, although her face is terribly lacerated. The dog was shot by a policeman.

Northfield.—The annual commencement exercises of Carleton college were held. The graduating class numbers forty-six, the largest in the history of the college. Miss Elinor Hallowell of Northfield delivered the valedictory and an oration on "Robert E. Lee, the Patriot," and Miss Anna Cathout delivered the salutatory and an oration on "The Significance of the Electron Theory."

Duluth.—A decomposed body, found sitting upright in a stream near Spirit Lake, on the St. Louis river, has been identified as Isak Altonen, an aged Finlander, and foul play is suspected. He left Smithville with a jug of liquor one day last December and was followed by two men who had been drinking with him. It is thought they pushed him over the cliff into the stream.

Minneapolis.—Donald Babcock, a senior at the University of Minnesota is the winner of the Wyman prize of $50, offered by J. T. Wyman of Minneapolis to the undergraduate student writing the best 5,000-word essay on the subject, "The Influence of Immigration on the Development of the Northwest."

Faribault.—The dwelling belonging to Mrs. Dunham, at Millersburg, was struck by lightning and completely destroyed by fire. Mrs. Dunham lived in the house alone and barely escaped from the building. The loss is about $1,200.

THE PRESIDENT TO EDITORS

Roosevelt Delivers a Notable Address at Jamestown, Va.

Speaks Before the Delegates to the National Editorial Association---Touches Upon Important National Questions.

Jamestown, Va.—The following is the address of President Roosevelt before the National Editorial association at the exposition here:

It is of course a mere truism to say that no other body of our countrymen wield as extensive an influence as those who write for the daily press and for the periodicals. It is also a truism to say that such power implies the gravest responsibility and the man exercising it should hold himself accountable, and should be held by others accountable, precisely as if he occupied any other position of public trust. I do not intend to dwell upon your duties to-day, save that I shall permit myself to point out one matter where it seems to me that the need of our people is vital. It is essential that the man in public life and the man who writes in the public press shall both of them, if they are really good servants of the people, be prompt to assail wrongdoing and wickedness. But in thus assailing wrongdoing and wickedness, there are two conditions to be fulfilled, because if unfulfilled, harm and not good will result. In the first place, be sure of your facts and avoid everything like hysteria or exaggeration; for to assail a decent man for something of which he is innocent is to give aid and comfort to every scoundrel, while indulgence in hysterical exaggeration serves to weaken, not strengthen, the statement of truth. In the second place, be sure that you base your judgment on conduct and not on the social or economic position of the individual with whom you are dealing. There are good and bad men in every walk of life, and their being good or bad does not depend upon whether they have or do not have large bank accounts. Yet this elemental fact, this fact which we all accept as self-evident, when we think each of us of the people whom he himself knows in his business and social relations, is often completely ignored by certain public men and certain public writers. The men who thus ignore it and who attack wickedness only when found in a particular class are always unsafe and are sometimes very dangerous leaders. Distrust equally the man who is never able to discover any sins of rich men to attack and the man who confines himself to attacking the sins and shortcomings of rich men. It is a sure sign of moral and mental dishonesty in any man if in his public assaults upon iniquity he is never able to see any iniquity save that of a particular class, and this whether he is able only to see the sins of arrogance and oppression in the rich or the crimes of envy and violence in the poor.

So much for what I have to say to you in your capacity of molders and guiders of public thought. In addition I want to speak to you on two great movements in our public life which I feel must necessarily occupy no inconsiderable part of the time of our public men in the near future. One of these is the question of, in certain ways, reshaping our system of taxation so as to make it bear most heavily on those most capable of supporting the strain. The other is the question of utilizing the natural resources of the nation in the way that will be of most benefit to the nation as a whole.

Need of Foresight.

In utilizing and conserving the natural resources of the nation the one characteristic more essential than any other is foresight. Unfortunately, foresight is not usually characteristic of a young and vigorous people, and it is obviously not a marked characteristic of us in the United States. Yet assuredly it should be the growing nation with a future which takes the long look ahead; and no other nation is growing so rapidly as ours or has a future so full of promise. No other nation enjoys so wonderful a measure of present prosperity which can of right be treated as an earnest of future success, and for no other are the rewards of foresight so great, so certain, and so easily foretold. Yet hitherto as a nation we have tended to live with an eye single to the present, and have permitted the reckless waste and destruction of much of our natural wealth.

The conservation of our natural resources and their proper use constitute the fundamental problem which underlies almost every other problem of our national life. Unless we maintain an adequate material basis for our civilization, we can not maintain the institutions in which we take so great and just a pride; and to waste and destroy our natural resources means to undermine this material basis. During the last five years efforts have been made in several new directions in the government service to get our people to look ahead, to exercise foresight and to substitute a planned and orderly development of our resources in the place of a haphazard striving for immediate profit. The effort has been made through several agencies.

In 1902 the reclamation service began to develop the larger opportunities of the western half of our country for irrigation. The work includes all the states from the great plains through the Rocky mountains to the Pacific slope. It has been conducted with the clear and definite purpose of using the valuable water resources of the public land for the greatest good for the greatest number in the long run; in other words, for the purpose of putting upon the land permanent home makers who will use and develop it for themselves and for their children and children's children. There has been opposition, of course, to this work of the reclamation service; for we have been obliged to antagonize certain men whose interest it was to exhaust for their own temporary personal profit natural resources which ought to be developed through use, so as to be conserved for the permanent common advantage of the people as a whole. But there will be no halt in the work of preserving the waters which head in the Rocky mountain region so as to make them of most use to the people as a whole; for the policy is essential to our national welfare.

Operations of Land Laws.

The public lands of the United States should be utilized in similar fashion. Our present public land laws were passed when there was a vast surplus of vacant public land. The chief desire was to secure settlers thereon, and comparatively slight attention was paid as to exactly how the lands were disposed of in detail. In consequence, lax execution of the laws became the rule both in the land office and in the public mind, and land frauds were common and little noted. This was especially true when a system originally designed for the fertile and well-watered regions of the middle west was applied to the dryer regions of the great plains and to the mountains and the Pacific coast. In these regions the system lent itself to fraud, and much land passed out of the hands of the government without passing into the hands of the home maker. The department of the interior and the department of justice joined in prosecuting the offenders against the law; but both the law and its administration were defective and needed to be changed. Three years ago a public lands commission was appointed to scrutinize the law and the facts and to recommend a remedy. Their examination specifically showed the existence of great frauds upon the public domain, and their recommendations for changes in the law were made with the design of conserving the natural resources of every part of the public land by putting it to its best use. Attention was especially called to the prevention of settlement by the passage of great areas of public lands into the hands of a few men, and to the enormous waste caused by unrestricted grazing on the open range; a system of using the natural forage on the public domain which amounts to putting a premium on its destruction. The recommendations of the public lands commission were sound, for they were especially in the interest of the actual home maker; and where the small home maker could not utilize the land, it was provided that the government should keep control of it so that it could not be monopolized by a few wealthy men. Congress has not yet acted upon these recommendations, except for the repeal of the iniquitous lieu-land law. But the recommendations are so just and proper, so essential to our national welfare, that I believe they will surely ultimately be adopted.

In 1891 congress authorized the president to create national forests in the public domain. These forests reserves remained for a long time in charge of the general land office, which had no men properly trained in forestry. But another department, that of agriculture, possessed the trained men. In other words, the government forests were without foresters and the government foresters without forests. Waste of effort and waste of forests inevitably followed. Finally the situation was ended in 1905 by the creation of the United States forest service, which has stopped the waste, conserved the resources of the national forests, and made them useful; so that our forests are now being managed on a coherent plan, and in a way that augurs well for the future.

The mineral fuels of the eastern United States have already passed into the hands of large private owners, and those of the west are rapidly following. This should not be, for such mineral resources belong in a peculiar degree to the whole people. Under private control there is much waste from the shortsighted methods of working, and the complete utilization is often sacrificed for a greater immediate profit. The mineral fuels under our present conditions are as essential to our prosperity as the forests will always be. The difference is that the supply is definitely limited, for coal does not grow and trees do. It is obvious that the mineral fuels should be conserved, not wasted, and that enough of them should remain in the hands of the government to protect the people against unjust or extortionate prices so far as that can still be done. What has been accomplished in the regulation of the great oil fields of the Indian territory offers a striking example of the good results of such a policy. Last summer, accordingly, I withdrew most of the coal-bearing public lands temporarily from disposal, and asked for the legislation necessary to protect the public interest by the conservation of the mineral fuels; that is, for the power to keep the fee in the government and to lease the coal, oil, and gas rights under proper regulation. No such legislation was passed, but I still hope that we shall ultimately get it.

Preserve Mineral Resources.

In addition to treating aright for the benefit of the whole people the forests and the mineral beds, we should similarly try to preserve for the benefit of all the people the great stretches of public domain, some three hundred million acres in all, which are unfit for cultivation by present methods and valuable only for the forage which they supply. This vast area is now open to the free grazing of cattle, sheep, horses and goats, without restriction or regulation. When population has increased, as is now the case, such utter lack of management means that the public domain is turned over to be skinned by men whose only concern is to get what they can out of it at the moment, without any regard to whether or not it is ruined so far as the next generation is concerned. In other words, the range is not so much used as wasted by abuse; and as an incident conflict and bloodshed frequently arise between opposing users. With the rapid settling of the west the range is more and more overgrazed. Moreover, much of it can not be used to advantage unless it is fenced, for fencing is the only way by which to keep in check the absentee owners of nomad flocks which roam hither and thither, utterly destroying the pasturage and leaving a waste behind, so that their presence is compatible with the presence of home makers.

Prevention of Frauds.

For several years we have been doing everything in our power to prevent fraud upon the public land. What can be done under the present laws is now being done through the joint action of the interior department and the department of justice. But fully to accomplish the prevention of fraud there is need of further legislation and especially of a sufficient appropriation to permit the department of the interior to examine certain classes of entries on the ground before they pass into private ownership. The appropriation asked for last winter, if granted, would have put an end to the squandering of the public domain, while it would have prevented any need of causing hardship to individual settlers by holding up their claims. However, the appropriation was not given us, and in consequence it is not possible to secure, as I would like to secure, the natural resources of the public land from fraud, waste and encroachment.

So much for what we are trying to do in utilizing our public lands for the public; in securing the use of the water, the forage, the coal and the timber for the public. In all four movements my chief adviser, and the man first to suggest to me the courses which have actually proved so beneficial, was Mr. Gifford Pinchot, the chief of the national forest service. Mr. Pinchot also suggested to me a movement supplementary to all of these movements; one which will itself lead the way in the general movement which he represents and with which he is actively identified, for the conservation of all our natural resources. This was the appointment of the inland waterways commission.

The inability of the railroads of the United States to meet the demands upon them has drawn public attention forcibly to the use of our waterways for transportation. But it is obvious that this is only one of their many uses, and that a planned and orderly development is impossible except by taking into account all the services they are capable of rendering. It was upon this ground that the inland waterways commission was recently appointed. Their duty is to propose a comprehensive plan for the improvement and utilization of those great waterways which are the great potential highways of the country. Their duty is also to bring together the points of view of all users of streams, and to submit a general plan for the development and conservation of the vast natural resources of the waterways of the United States. Clearly it is impossible for the waterways commission to accomplish its great task without considering the relation of streams to the conservation and use of all other natural resources, and I have asked that it do so. Here, then, for the first time, the orderly development and planned conservative use of all our natural resources is presented as a single problem. One by one the individual tasks in this great problem have already been undertaken. One by one in practical fashion the methods of dealing with them were worked out. National irrigation has proved itself a success by its actual working. Again, actual experience has shown that the national forests will fulfill the larger purpose for which they were created. All who have thoughtfully studied the subject have come to see that the solution of the public lands question lies with the home maker, with the settler who lives on his land and that government control of the mineral fuels and the public grazing lands is necessary and inevitable. Each of these conclusions represented a movement of vast importance which would confer large benefits upon the nation, but which stood by itself. They are connected together into one great fundamental problem—that of the conservation of all our natural resources. Upon the wise solution of this, much of our future obviously depends. Even such questions as the regulation of railway rates and the control of corporations are in reality subsidiary to the primal problem of the preservation in the interests of the whole people of the resources that nature has given us. If we fail to solve this problem, no skill in solving the others will in the end avail us very greatly.

Now as to the matter of taxation. Most great civilized countries have an income tax and an inheritance tax. In my judgment both should be part of our system of federal taxation. I speak diffidently about the income tax because one scheme for an income tax was declared unconstitutional by the supreme court by a five to four vote; and in addition it is a difficult tax to administer in its practical workings, and great care would have to be exercised to see that it was not evaded by the very man whom it is most desirable to have taxed, for if so evaded it would of course be worse than no tax at all, as the least desirable of all taxes is the tax which bears heavily upon the honest as compared with the dishonest man. Nevertheless, a graduated income tax of the proper type would be a desirable permanent feature of federal taxation, and I still hope that one may be devised which the supreme court will declare constitutional.

Inheritance Tax.

In my judgment, however, the inheritance tax is both a far better method of taxation, and far more important for the purpose I have in view—the purpose of having the swollen fortunes of the country bear in proportion to their size a constantly increasing burden of taxation. These fortunes exist solely because of the protection given the owners by the public. They are a constant source of care and anxiety to the public and it is eminently just that they should be forced to pay heavily for the protection given them. It is, of course, elementary that the nation has the absolute right to decide as to the terms upon which any man shall receive a bequest or devise from another. We have repeatedly placed such laws on our own statute books, and they have repeatedly been declared constitutional by the courts. I believe that the tax should contain the progressive principle. Whatever any individual receives, whether by gift, bequest, or devise, in life or in death, should, after a certain amount is reached, be increasingly burdened; and the rate of taxation should be increased in proportion to the remoteness of blood of the man receiving from the man giving or devising. The principle of this progressive taxation of inheritance has not only been authoritatively recognized by the legislation of congress, but it is now unequivocally adopted in the leading civilized nations of the world—in, for instance, Great Britain, France and Germany. Switzerland led off with the imposition of high progressive rates. Great Britain was the first of the great nations to follow suit, and within the last few years both France and Germany have adopted the principle. In Great Britain all estates worth $5,000 or less are practically exempt from death duties, while the increase is such that when an estate exceeds $5,000,000 in value and passes to a distant kinsman or stranger in blood the government receives nearly 18 per cent. In France, under the progressive system, so much of an inheritance as exceeds $10,000,000 pays over 20 per cent. to the state if it passes to a distant relative, and five per cent. if it passes to a direct heir. In Germany very small inheritance are exempt, but the tax is so sharply progressive that an inheritance not in agricultural or forest lands which exceeds $250,000, if it goes to distant relatives, is taxed at the rate of about 25 per cent. The German law is of special interest, because it makes the inheritance tax an imperial measure, while allotting to the individual states of the empire a portion of the proceeds and permitting them to impose taxes in addition to those imposed by the imperial government. In the United State the national government has more than once imposed inheritance taxes in addition to those imposed by the states, and in the last instance about one-half of the states levied such taxes concurrently with the national government, making a combined maximum rate, in some cases as high as 25 per cent.; and, as a matter of fact, several states adopted inheritance tax laws for the first time while the national law was still in force and unrepealed. The French law has one feature which is to be heartily commended. The progressive principle is so applied that each higher rate is imposed only on the excess above the amount subject to the next lower rate. This plain is peculiarly adapted to the working out of the theory of using the inheritance tax for the purpose of limiting the size of inheritable fortunes, since the progressive increase in the rates, according to this mode, may be carried to its logical conclusion in a maximum rate of nearly 100 per cent. for the amount in excess of a specified sum, without being confiscatory as to the rest of the inheritance; for each increase in rate would apply only to the amount above a certain maximum.

WAR HEROES HONORED

MONUMENTS ERECTED TO NOTED SOLDIERS AND SEAMAN.

Statue to Gen. Lawton, Who Fell in the Philippines, Unveiled at Indianapolis by President Roosevelt.

Indianapolis, Ind.—That potriotism in this country is not at a low ebb is indicated by the number of memorials to heroes and statesmen recently erected. There is a close connection between potriotism and art. One is especially reminded of this in the study of ancient countries, and it is becoming more and more true of America. The fact has been emphasized within a short time by the unveiling of a statue of Commodore John Barry in Philadelphia and the completion by Karl Bitter of a statue of Gen. Franz Sigel for a site on Riverside Drive. Further emphasis was added with the unveiling on May 30 at Indianapolis of a statue of Gen. Henry W. Lawton, at which the president made an important address.

Gen. Lawton was a soldier of the civil war, saw service in the Spanish-American war, and was killed while fighting in the Philippines. The republic has many memorials of soldiers of the revolution and the civil war, but as yet few erected in honor of heroes of battle for the flag in the faraway islands of the east. Special interest attaches to the memorial unveiled at Indianapolis for this reason.

Gen. Lawton, who was born at Manhattan, O., in 1843, began his military career as an enlisted man in a volunteer regiment in 1861 and held the rank of major general of volunteers when his life was ended by a Filipino bullet on December 10, 1899. His commission as a brigadier general in the regular service was being prepared when he was shot. When war with Spain broke out he was in demand in the field, for he had enjoyed not only a civil war experience, but a career as an Indian fighter on the plains of the west. One of the famous episodes of his career was his pursuit and capture of Geronimo. He was in command of the second division of the fifth army corps before Santiago, and on the conclusion of peace was transferred to the Philippines.

He captured Santa Cruz, a Filipino stronghold, April 10, 1899, and San Isidro on May 15, and on June 1 was placed in command at Manila. He had begun an offensive campaign looking toward the capture of Aguinaldo when he was killed while directing an attack upon the insurgents in an engagement near San Mateo, about 15 miles from Manila. A monument was erected by American soldiers at the spot where he fell. This memorial is in the shape of a pyramid 15 feet high. On the top an old Spanish cannon is mounted, surrounded by four modern shells. The brave commander was greatly beloved by the soldiers who fought with him in Cuba and the Philippines, and his character was most highly esteemed by President Roosevelt, his comrade in Cuba, a fact that led the latter to accept the invitation to make the principal address at the unveiling ceremonies at Indianapolis.

The equestrian statute of Gen. Franz Sigel has engaged the best efforts of Mr. Bitter since he received the commission for the work about three years ago. The unveiling ceremonies will occur in October next. The site for the memorial is Riverside Drive, and it will be one more important adornment for a locality that has already come to be known as the Acropolis of New York.

Lawton Monument in Indianapolis.

The Barry statue was presented to the city of Philadelphia by the Society of Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, of which the naval hero was a member. It is of bronze and of heroic size and stands in front of Independence hall, where it was unveiled on March 16 by a great-great-grandniece of Barry, 12-year-old Miss Elsie Hazel Hepburne. Barry is often called "the Father of the American Navy," and his right to the title was defended by Rear-Admiral George W. Melville, retired, in an address which was the leading feature of the unveiling ceremonies. Barry was born in Ireland in 1745 and came to the colonies when 15 years old. He commanded the first ship that flew the continental flag and captured the first vessel taken by an American warship.

GRANT'S OLD HOME IN ST. LOUIS.

Cottage Once Occupied by Great Soldier and Traded for a Farm.

St. Louis.—While modern brick dwellings have sprung up on all sides in the vicinity of Tenth and Barton streets, there remains standing two doors west of the corner an antiquated little wooden cottage, guarded by memories so sacred that the hand of the despoiler has never dared to raise against it.

Grant's Old St. Louis Home.

The humble structure was the abode of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, soldier, statesman and president of the United States, and, it is believed, was the birthplace of Gen. Frederick Grant, the revered soldier's son.

The fact that the cottage was once owned by Gen. Grant was brought to light by a recent article in a St. Louis paper, stating that a patriotic wave of reverence for the name of Grant had started in St. Louis and was being fostered by the Grant Cabin association, which plans to restore Grant's log cabin on the fair grounds to its original site on the Grant farm in St. Louis county, near Fenton.

Mrs. Philomena Holiweg, of 1002 Barton street, one door east of Grant's former abode, which she owns, noticed the article and communicated with the paper, stating the fact and giving what scraps of its history she recalls.

The little structure has a ground floor containing four small rooms. An attic room is reached by a narrow flight of rickety wooden stairs.

The house was occupied by Mrs. Holiweg and her husband for many years after they acquired it in 1865, for $3,025 from the late Mr. and Mrs. Joseph W. White.

White obtained the house from Grant, according to the tradition, in exchange for the farm in the county on which Grant built in 1854 the famous log cabin.

SECRETARY STRAUS' WIFE.

Only Jewess Among Cabinet Ladies Is a Beautiful and Cultured Woman.

Washington.—The wife of the new secretary of commerce and labor is many years younger than her husband. Mrs. Straus was one of the beauties of New York Jewish circles, and her 20 years of married life have left her still a queenly and beautiful woman. She possesses rare culture and shares with her husband the genius of diplomacy. As Miss Sarah Lavenburg she was known for her graces and charities.

For many years after her marriage, Mrs. Straus devoted her entire attention to the care and education of her daughters, and it was not until President Cleveland sent her husband as minister to Turkey that she found a field for her broader sense of diplomacy. Oscar Straus and his brother, Nathan, fought hard for the election of Cleveland, and it is a strange coincidence that Oscar Straus should have accepted a cabinet position under a Republican president, though a Democrat, while his brother declined one under the president they both helped to elect.

MRS. OSCAR STRAUS.
(Wife of New Secretary of Commerce and Labor.)

Washington is the most cosmopolitan city in America and Mrs. Straus will not find thorns in the path of social success. Her own frank and open manner will win her friends, and her fine intelligence will lead her unerringly through the maze of diplomatic amenities, obligations and intricacies, in which she is already a skillful and exceptional sailor.

Sporting Gossip.

"Don't let anyone tell you Jim Jeffries will ever fight again," says Arthur Crane, former amateur middleweight champion. "He will never again draw on a boxing glove. Jim told me so, and I believe him. All the talk of Jeff's returning to the ring is just circulated to get him a few of these $1,000 refereeing jobs. It keeps his name before the public and boosts things nicely. I don't think Jeff could ever again get in shape for a battle. He is huge and soft, lazy and comfortable, and he doesn't even think of fighting. He's not broke, either—still has money put away, and has a farm worth keeping. If he takes up the boxing game in Los Angeles—runs a club there—he will make a fortune, for the people have full confidence in him and have lost faith in Tom McCarey. Tom's all right, I guess—only I was a bit puzzled by a certain fighter who, the day he reached Los Angeles, came to see me. This boy said he had seen McCarey, and that Tom said to him: 'Well, do you wish to win or lose?' What did he mean by that, I wonder?"

Adrian Joss, pitcher of the Cleveland club, of the American league, is a native of Juneau, Wis., where he was born 26 years ago. He pitched for the Sacred Heart college team, of Watertown, Wis., and after leaving that institution, taught school until he joined the Sheboygan (Wis.) club, from which he graduated to the Toledo team in 1900, remaining with it for two seasons, although farmed out for a time. In 1903 he commenced his Cleveland career and developed into one of the premier pitchers of the profession. His 1906 record was 21 victories and nine defeats, ranking third among the regulars, according to Secretary McRoy's figures. This season he won ten straight games for his team before he was beaten.

Adrian Joss.

Jack Munroe, the erstwhile fighter and the only man who ever put Jim Jeffries on his knees in a prize ring, is fast becoming a wealthy man. He has returned to the mines with profit. Munroe's jump into pugilistic fame was when, six years ago, he held his own with Jeffries, who shortly afterward put him away with ease. Later Jack Johnson made Munroe look like a novice in a six-round bout in Philadelphia. Contrary to the general opinion, Munroe is an intelligent fellow, and writes a beautiful hand. He is now in Haileybury, Ontario, the heart of the Cobalt district. Speaking of his newly found source of profit, Munroe says:

"Yes, I'm a regular miner once more. I've quit the fighting game for good. No more of the biff, bang, biff sport for yours truly. Yes, I've finished with the fighting game," he went on. "I'm up here in a cobalt district. I've got a great proposition. Myself and a couple of fellows took a chance. We went up there about two years ago on a hunting trip. You know I have worked in the mines all my life. Well, I discovered some rich silver ore. We staked off a claim, bought the land and began working it."

Again Munroe smiled.

"Good mine, you ask?" repeated Jack. "Well, any time I sell out I'll be fixed for life. I have made a fortune in two years. We are just beginning to get the real results now. I think when we counted up about a week ago we were $340,000 winner. Not bad, eh?

"I'm going back to New York some day in my own private car. They kidded me after Jeff beat me. Well, they can kid me now if they want to. I've got the coin and kidding is a pleasure now. They can talk about they'd rather be a lamppost on Broadway than a king anywhere else. Well, that stuff might go for some, but I'd rather be a little mine owner up there in Cobalt than anything else. It's great. Take it from me."

The Steubenville club, of the P.-O.-M. league, has been strengthened by the addition of infielder Otto Kruger, who played with East Liverpool last year, was drafted by Kansas City and released to Steubenville. Pitcher Buckley, of Harrisburg, and catcher McCown, of the Jersey City team, have been also secured.

The [illegible] the question of utilizing the [illegible] resources of the nation in the [illegible] will be of most benefit to the [illegible] a whole.

Need of Foresight.

The effort has been [illegible] several agencies.

[illegible] the reclamation service began [illegible] the larger opportunities of the [illegible] half of our country for irrigation. The work includes all the states from the great plains through the Rocky [illegible] to the Pacific slope. It has been [illegible] with the clear and defi[illegible] of using the valuable water [illegible] of the public land for the [illegible] good for the greatest number in the [illegible] In other words, for the [illegible] of putting upon the land permanent home makers who will use and [illegible] it for themselves and for their [illegible] and children's children. There has been opposition, of course, to this [illegible] of the reclamation service; for we have been obliged to antagonize certain men whose interest it was to exhaust for their own temporary personal profit natural resources which ought to be developed through use, so as to be conserved for the permanent common advantage of the people as a whole. But there will be no halt in the work of preserving the waters which head in the Rocky mountains again so as to make them of most use to the people as a whole; for the policy is essential to our national welfare.

Operations of Land Laws.

The public lands of the United States should be utilized in similar fashion. Our present public land laws were passed when there was a vast surplus of vacant public land. The chief desire was to secure settlers thereon, and comparatively slight attention was paid as to exactly how the lands were disposed of in detail. In consequence, lax execution of the laws became the rule both in the land office and in the public mind, and land frauds were common and little noted. This was especially true when a system originally designed for the fertile and well watered regions of the middle west was applied to the dryer regions of the great plains and to the mountains and the Pacific coast. In these regions the system lent itself to fraud, and much land passed out of the hands of the government without passing into the hands of the home maker. The department of the interior and the department of justice joined in prosecuting the offenders against the law, but both the law and its administration were defective and needed to be changed. Three years ago a public lands commission was appointed to scrutinize the law and the facts and to recommend a remedy. Their examination specifically showed the existence of great frauds upon the public domain, and their recommendations for changes in the law were made with the design of conserving the natural resources of every part of the public land by putting it to its best use. Attention was especially called to the prevention of settlement by the passage of great areas of public lands into the hands of a few men, and to the enormous waste caused by unrestricted grazing on the open range, a system of using the natural forage on the public domain which amounts to putting a premium on its destruction. The recommendations of the public lands commission were sound, for they were especially in the interest of the actual home maker; and where the small home maker could not utilize the land, it was provided that the government should keep control of it so that it could not be monopolized by a few wealthy men. Congress has not yet acted upon these recommendations, except for the repeal of the iniquitous lieu-land law. But the recommendations are so just and proper, so essential to our national welfare, that I believe they will surely ultimately be adopted.

In 1891 congress authorized the president to create national forests in the public domain. These forests reserves remained for a long time in charge of the general land office, which had no men properly trained in forestry. But another department, that of agriculture, possessed the trained men. In other words, the government forests were without foresters and the government foresters without forests. Waste of effort and waste of forests inevitably followed. Finally the situation was ended in 1905 by the creation of the United States forest service, which has stopped the waste, conserved the resources of the national forests, and made them useful, so that our forests are now being managed on a coherent plan, and in a way that augurs well for the future.

The mineral fuels of the eastern United States have already passed into the hands of large private owners, and those of the west are rapidly following. This should not be, for such mineral resources belong in a peculiar degree to the whole people. Under private control there is much waste from the shortsighted methods of working, and the complete utilization is often sacrificed for a greater immediate profit. The mineral fuels under our present conditions are as essential to our prosperity as the forests will always be. The difference is that the supply is definitely limited, for coal does not grow and trees do. It is obvious that the mineral fuels should be conserved, not wasted, and that enough of them should remain in the hands of the government to protect the people against unjust or extortionate prices so far as that can still be done. What has been accomplished in the regulation of the great oil fields of the Indian territory offers a striking example of the good results of such a policy. Last summer, accordingly, I withdrew most of the coal-bearing public lands temporarily from disposal, and asked for the legislation necessary to protect the public interest by the conservation of the mineral fuels; that is, for the power to keep the fee in the government and to lease the coal, oil, and gas rights under proper regulation. No such legislation was passed, but I still hope that we shall ultimately get it.

Preserve Mineral Resources.

In addition to treating aright for the benefit of the whole people the forests and the mineral beds, we should similarly try to preserve for the benefit of all the people the great stretches of public domain, some three hundred million acres in all, which are unfit for cultivation by present methods and valuable only for the forage which they supply. This vast area is now open to the free grazing of cattle, sheep, horses and goats, without restriction or regulation. When population has increased, as is now the case, such utter lack of management means that the public domain is turned over to be skinned by men whose only concern is to get what they can out of it at the moment, without any regard to whether or not it is ruined so far as the next generation is concerned. In other words, the range is not so much used as wasted by abuse; and as an incident conflict and bloodshed frequently arise between opposing users. With the rapid settling of the west the range is more and more overgrazed. Moreover, much of it can not be used to advantage unless it is fenced, for fencing is the only way by which to keep in check the absentee owners of nomad flocks which roam hither and thither, utterly destroying the pasturage and leaving a waste behind, so that their presence is compatible with the presence of home makers.

Prevention of Frauds.

For several years we have been doing everything in our power to prevent fraud upon the public land. What can be done under the present laws is now being done through the joint action of the interior department and the department of justice. But fully to accomplish the prevention of fraud there is need of further legislation and especially of a sufficient appropriation to permit the department of the interior to examine certain classes of entries on the ground before they pass into private ownership. The appropriation asked for last winter, if granted, would have put an end to the squandering of the public domain, while it would have prevented any need of causing hardship to individual settlers by holding up their claims. However, the appropriation was not given us, and in consequence it is not possible to secure, as I would like to secure, the natural resources of the public land from fraud, waste and encroachment.

So much for what we are trying to do in utilizing our public lands for the public; in securing the use of the water, the forage, the coal and the timber for the public. In all four movements my chief adviser, and the man first to suggest to me the courses which have actually proved so beneficial, was Mr. Gifford Pinchot, the chief of the national forest service. Mr. Pinchot also suggested to me a movement supplementary to all of these movements; one which will itself lead the way in the general movement which he represents and with which he is actively identified, for the conservation of all our natural resources. This was the appointment of the inland waterways commission.

The inability of the railroads of the United States to meet the demands upon them has drawn public attention forcibly to the use of our waterways for trasportation. But it is obvious that this is only one of their many uses, and that a planned and orderly development is impossible except by taking into account all the services they are capable of rendering. It was upon this ground that the inland waterways commission was recently appointed. Their duty is to propose a comprehensive plan for the improvement and utilization of those great waterways which are the great potential highways of the country. Their duty is also to bring together the points of view of all users of streams, and to submit a general plan for the development and conservation of the vast natural resources of the waterways of the United States. Clearly it is impossible for the waterways commission to accomplish its great task without considering the relation of streams to the conservation and use of all other natural resources, and I have asked that it do so. Here, then, for the first time, the orderly developemnt and planned conservative use of all our natural resources is presented as a single problem. One by one the individual tasks in this great problem have already been undertaken. One by one in practical fashion the methods of dealing with them were worked out. National irrigation has proved itself a success by its actual working. Again, actual experience has shown that the national forests will fulfill the larger purpose for which they were created. All who have thoughtfully studied the subject have come to see that the solution of the public lands question lies with the home maker, with the settler who lives on his land and that government control of the mineral fuels and the public grazing lands is necessary and inevitable. Each of these conclusions represented a movement of vast importance which would confer large benefits upon the nation, but which stood by itself. They are connected together into one great fundamental problem—that of the conservation of all our natural resources. Upon the wise solution of this, much of our future obviously depends. Even such questions as the regulation of railway rates and the control of corporations are in reality subsidiary to the primal problem of the preservation in the interests of the whole people of the resources that nature has given us. If we fail to solve this problem, no skill in solving the others will in the end avail us very greatly.

Now as to the matter of taxation. Most great civilized countries have an income tax and an inheritance tax. In my judgment both should be part of our system of federal taxation. I speak diffidently about the income tax because one scheme for an income tax was declared unconstitutional by the supreme court by a five to four vote; and in addition it is a difficult tax to administer in its practical workings, and great care would have to be exercised to see that it was not evaded by the very man whom it is most desirable to have taxed, for if so evaded it would of course be worse than no tax at all, as the least desirable of all taxes is the tax which bears heavily upon the honest as compared with the dishonest man. Nevertheless, a graduated income tax of the proper type would be a desirable peramnent feature of federal taxation, and I still hope that one may be devised which the supreme court will declare constitutional.

Inheritance Tax.

In my judgment, however, the inheritance tax is both a far better method of taxation, and far more important for the purpose I have in view—the purpose of having the swollen fortunes of the country bear in proportion to their size a constantly increasing burden of taxation. These fortunes exist solely because of the protection given the owners by the public. They are a constant source of care and anxiety to the public and it is eminently just that they should be forced to pay heavily for the protection given them. It is, of course, elementary that the nation has the absolute right to decide as to the terms upon which any man shall receive a bequest or devise from another. We have repeatedly placed such laws on our own statute books, and they have repeatedly been declared constitutional by the courts. I believe that the tax should contain the progressive principle. Whatever any individual receives, whether by gift, bequest, or devise, in life or in death, should, after a certain amount is reached, be increasingly burdened; and the rate of taxation should be increased in proportion to the remoteness of blood of the man receiving from the man giving or devising. This principle of this progressive taxation of inheritance has not only been authoritatively recognized by the legislation of congress, but it is now unequivocally adopted in the leading civilized nations of the world—in, for instance, Great Britain, France and Germany. Switzerland led off with the imposition of high progressive rates. Great Britain was the first of the great nations to follow suit, and within the last few years both France and Germany have adopted the principle. In Great Britain all estates worth $5,000 or less are practically exempt from death duties, while the increase is such that when an estate exceeds $5,000,000 in value and passes to a distant kinsman or stranger in blood the government receives nearly 18 per cent. In France, under the progressive system, so much of an inheritance as exceeds $10,000,000 pays over 20 per cent. to the state if it passes to a distant relative, and five per cent. if it passes to a direct heir. In Germany very small inheritance are exempt, but the tax is so sharply progressive that an inheritance not in agricultural or forest lands which exceeds $250,000, if it goes to distant relatives, is taxed at the rate of about 25 per cent. The German law is of special interest, because it makes the inheritance tax an imperial measure, while allotting to the individual states of the empire a portion of the proceeds and permitting them to impose taxes in addition to those imposed by the imperial government. In the United States the national government has more than once imposed inheritance taxes in addition to those imposed by the states, and in the last instance about one-half of the states levied such taxes concurrently with the national government, making a combined maximum rate, in some cases as high as 25 per cent.; and, as a matter of fact, several states adopted inheritance tax laws for the first time while the national law was still in force and unrepealed. The French law has one feature which is to be heartily commended. The progressive principle is so applied that each higher rate is imposed only on the excess above the amount subject to the next lower rate. This plan is peculiarly adapted to the working out of the theory of using the inheritance tax for the purpose of limiting the size of inheritable fortunes, since the progressive increase in the rates, according to this mode, may be carried to its logical conclusion in a maximum rate of nearly 100 per cent. for the amount in excess of a specified sum, without being confiscatory as to the rest of the inheritance; for each increase in rate would apply only to the amount above a certain maximum.

WAR HEROES HONORED

MONUMENTS ERECTED TO NOTED SOLDIERS AND SEAMAN.

Statue to Gen. Lawton, Who Fell in the Philippines, Unveiled at Indianapolis by President Roosevelt.

Indianapolis, Ind.—That patriotism in this country is not at a low ebb is indicated by the number of memorials to heroes and statesmen recently erected. There is a close connection between patriotism and art. One is especially reminded of this in the study of ancient countries, and it is becoming more and more true of America. The fact has been emphasized within a short time by the unveiling of a statue of Commodore John Barry in Philadelphia and the completion by Karl Bitter of a statue of Gen. Franz Sigel for a site on Riverside Drive. Further emphasis was added with the unveiling on May 30 at Indianapolis of a statue of Gen. Henry W. Lawton, at which the president made an important address.

Gen. Lawton was a soldier of the civil war, saw service in the Spanish-American war, and was killed while fighting in the Philippines. The republic has many memorials of soldiers of the revolution and the civil war, but as yet few erected in honor of heroes of battle for the flag in the faraway islands of the east. Special interest attaches to the memorial unveiled at Indianapolis for this reason.

Gen. Lawton, who was born at Manhattan, O., in 1843, began his military career as an enlisted man in a volunteer regiment in 1861 and held the rank of major general of volunteers when his life was ended by a Filipino bullet on December 10, 1899. His commission as a brigadier general in the regular service was being prepared when he was shot. When war with Spain broke out he was in demand in the field, for he had enjoyed not only a civil war experience, but a career as an Indian fighter on the plains of the west. One of the famous episodes of his career was his pursuit and capture of Geronimo. He was in command of the second division of the fifth army corps before Santiago, and on the conclusion of peace was transferred to the Philippines.

He captured Santa Cruz, a Filipino stronghold, April 10, 1899, and San Isidro on May 15, and on June 1 was placed in command at Manila. He had begun an offensive campaign looking toward the capture of Aguinaldo when he was killed while directing an attack upon the insurgents in an engagement near San Mateo, about 15 miles from Manila. A monument was erected by American soldiers at the spot where he fell. This memorial is in the shape of a pyramid 15 feet high. On the top an old Spanish cannon is mounted, surrounded by four modern shells. The brave commander was greatly beloved by the soldiers who fought with him in Cuba and the Philippines, and his character was most highly esteemed by President Roosevelt, his comrade in Cuba, a fact that led the latter to accept the invitation to make the principal address at the unveiling ceremonies at Indianapolis.

The equestrian statute of Gen. Franz Sigel has engaged the best efforts of Mr. Bitter since he received the commission for the work about three years ago. The unveiling ceremonies will occur in October next. The site for the memorial is Riverside Drive, and it will be one more important adornment for a locality that has already come to be known as the Acropolis of New York.

Lawton Monument in Indianapolis.

The Barry statue was presented to the city of Philadelphia by the Society of Friendly Sons of St. Patrick, of which the naval hero was a member. It is of bronze and of heroic size and stands in front of Independence hall, where it was unveiled on March 16 by a great-great-grandniece of Barry, 12-year-old Miss Elsie Hazel Hepburne. Barry is often called "the Father of the American Navy," and his right to the title was defended by Rear-Admiral George W. Melville, retired, in an address which was the leading feature of the unveiling ceremonies. Barry was born in Ireland in 1745 and came to the colonies when 15 years old. He commanded the first ship that flew the continental flag and captured the first vessel taken by an American warship.

GRANT'S OLD HOME IN ST. LOUIS.

Cottage Once Occupied by Great Soldier and Traded for a Farm.

St. Louis.—While modern brick dwellings have sprung up on all sides in the vicinity of Tenth and Barton streets, there remains standing two doors west of the corner an antiquated little wooden cottage, guarded by memories so sacred that the hand of the despoiler has never dared to raise against it.

Grant's Old St. Louis Home.

The humble structure was the abode of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant, soldier, statesman and president of the United States, and, it is believed, was the birthplace of Gen. Frederick Grant, the revered soldier's son.

The fact that the cottage was once owned by Gen. Grant was brought to light by a recent article in a St. Louis paper, stating that a patriotic wave of reverence for the name of Grant had started in St. Louis and was being fostered by the Grant Cabin association, which plans to restore Grant's log cabin on the fair grounds to its original site on the Grant farm in St. Louis county, near Fenton.

Mrs. Philomena Hollweg, of 1002 Barton street, one door east of Grant's former abode, which she owns, noticed the article and communicated with the paper, stating the fact and giving what scraps of its history she recalls.

The little structure has a ground floor containing four small rooms. An attic room is reached by a narrow flight of rickety wooden stairs.

The house was occupied by Mrs. Hollweg and her husband for many years after they acquired it in 1865, for $3,025 from the late Mr. and Mrs. Joseph W. White.

SECRETARY STRAUS' WIFE.

Only Jewess Among Cabinet Ladies Is a Beautiful and Cultured Woman.

Washington.—The wife of the new secretary of commerce and labor is many years younger than her husband. Mrs. Straus was one of the beauties of New York Jewish circles, and her 20 years of married life have left her still a queenly and beautiful woman. She possesses rare culture and shares with her husband the genius of diplomacy. As Miss Sarah Lavenburg she was known for her graces and charities.

For many years after her marriage, Mrs. Straus devoted her entire attention to the care and education of her daughters, and it was not until President Cleveland sent her husband as minister to Turkey that she found a field for her broader sense of diplomacy. Oscar Straus and his brother, Nathan, fought hard for the election of Cleveland, and it is a strange coincidence that Oscar Straus should have accepted a cabinet position under a Republican president, though a Democrat, while his brother declined one under the president they both helped to elect.

Washington is the most cosmopolitan city in America and Mrs. Straus will not find thorns in the path of social success. Her own frank and open manner will win her friends, and her fine intelligence will lead her unerringly through the maze of diplomatic amenities, obligations and intricacies, in which she is already a skillful and exceptional sailor.

Sporting Gossip.

"Don't let anyone tell you Jim Jeffries will ever fight again," says Arthur Crane, former amateur middleweight champion. "He will never again draw on a boxing glove. Jim told me so, and I believe him. All the talk of Jeff's returning to the ring is just circulated to get him a few of these $1,000 refereeing jobs. It keeps his name before the public and boosts things nicely. I don't think Jeff could ever again get in shape for a battle. He is huge and soft, lazy and comfortable, and he doesn't even think of fighting. He's not broke, either—still has money put away, and has a farm worth keeping. If he takes up the boxing game in Los Angeles—runs a club there—he will make a fortune, for the people have full confidence in him and have lost faith in Tom McCarey. Tom's all right, I guess—only I was a bit puzzled by a certain fighter who, the day he reached Los Angeles, came to see me. This boy said he had seen McCarey, and that Tom said to him: 'Well, do you wish to win or lose?' What did he mean by that, I wonder?"

Adrian Joss, pitcher of the Cleveland club, of the American league, is a native of Juneau, Wis., where he was born 26 years ago. He pitched for the Sacred Heart college team, of Watertown, Wis., and after leaving that institution, taught school until he joined the Sheboygan (Wis.) club, from which he graduated to the Toledo team in 1900, remaining with it for two seasons, although farmed out for a time. In 1903 he commenced his Cleveland career and developed into one of the premier pitchers of the profession. His 1906 record was 21 victories and nine defeats, ranking third among the regulars, according to Secretary McRoy's figures. This season he won ten straight games for his team before he was beaten.

Jack Munroe, the erstwhile fighter and the only man who ever put Jim Jeffries on his knees in a prize ring, is fast becoming a wealthy man. He has returned to the mines with profit. Munroe's jump into pugilistic fame was when, six years ago, he held his own with Jeffries, who shortly afterward put him away with ease. Later Jack Johnson made Munroe look like a novice in a six-round bout in Philadelphia. Contrary to the general opinion, Munroe is an intelligent fellow, and writes a beautiful hand. He is now in Halleybury, Ontario, the heart of the Cobalt district. Speaking of his newly found source of profit, Munroe says:

"Yes, I'm a regular miner once more. I've quit the fighting game for good. No more of the biff, bang, hiff sport for yours truly. Yes, I've finished with the fighting game," he went on. "I'm up here in a cobalt district. I've got a great proposition. Myself and a couple of fellows took a chance. We went up there about two years ago on a hunting trip. You know I have worked in the mines all my life. Well, I discovered some rich silver ore. We staked off a claim, bought the land and began working it."

Again Munroe smiled.

"Good mine, you ask?" repeated Jack. "Well, any time I sell out I'll be fixed for life. I have made a fortune in two years. We are just beginning to get the real results now. I think when we counted up about a week ago we were $340,000 winner. Not bad, eh?

"I'm going back to New York some day in my own private car. They kidded me after Jeff beat me. Well, they can kid me now if they want to. I've got the coin and kidding is a pleasure now. They can talk about they'd rather be a lamppost on Broadway than a king anywhere else. Well, that stuff might go for some, but I'd rather be a little mine owner up there in Cobalt than anything else. It's great. Take it from me."

The Steubenville club, of the P.-O.-M. league, has been strengthened by the addition of infielder Otto Kruger, who played with East Liverpool last year, was drafted by Kansas City and released to Steubenville. Pitcher Buckley, of Harrisburg, and catcher McCown, of the Jersey City team, have been also secured.

SUBTERRANEAN RIVERS.

Yucatan's Only Streams Flow Beneath Coral Rock.

There are no streams in Yucatan which flow above the ground, but the whole peninsula is one vast table of coral rock and beneath it are immense sheets of fresh water, with regular though ill defined tides and currents. Along the coasts these subterranean waters are quite near the surface, but in the interior, where the calcareous layer is of great thickness, the waters are low down. At intervals they break into caverns formed by earthquakes by pressure of their own force or by the infiltration of surface water into the natural grottoes of the coral rock and wherever the water can be reached, whether through artificial pits or by the operations of nature, the place is called a cenote. There are a great many of them scattered all over Yucatan, and those near Merida are utilized as public bathhouses, affording most refreshing resorts.

Centuries ago the Indians marked the courses of the subterranean rivers by heaps of stones and always built their cities close by the water caves, as their ruins show, and it is interesting to note to this day all the civilized centers of Yucatan have arisen around these natural reservoirs. There are many forms of cenotes. When the water flows at a slight depth and the calcareous layer has been only partially eaten away there follows an irregular sinking, which forms a cave, opening from side to side, but when the crust is thicker and the underground stream has a regular course the soil is generally corroded in a circular space and the vault thus formed, lacking support, falls in, making an immense open wall. Often the crust is so deep that the soft parts only crumble down, leaving a small aperture toward the top, fashioning a real grotto, with stalactites and stalagmites galore. Again, it happens that the crust is exceedingly thick, when a colossal subterranean passage, like a tunnel, is formed. In short, all the variations which an undisturbed stream may produce in a friable soil by the silent work of ages may be here witnessed. The cenote of which I write is a natural cavern nearly fifty feet deep, broken down at one side, thus forming a gigantic arch. Within it appears every form of stalagmite and stalactite, and its roof is perforated with holes, in which are thousands of birds' and hornets' nests. At the bottom of it, reached by a flight of stone steps from the charming garden above, is an extensive sheet of clear, fresh water, containing a multitude of tiny fish (Pescado cenote) similar to those found in the Mammoth cave of Kentucky, only these are not eyeless. The overhanging roots of trees fringe its broken arch, affording shelter to innumerable lizards and iguanas, which dart along the ledges like embodied sunbeams, while above them countless swallows circle in masses so dense that the whirring of their wings produces a deafening noise, echoed from below in hollow reverberations.

The Italian Baby.

No infant receives a warmer welcome to the world or is more happily born than the Italian baby. No infant is the object of more caresses or is more fondly admired. Indeed, no matter how poor the mother and father may be, no matter how large the family, they have very merry times when another son or daughter comes to them. The neighbors are invited in, a feast is prepared, a gallon or two of cheap wine is procured, and the merriment sometimes lasts several days. The Italian considers there are only three great events in the life of man—namely, his birth, marriage and death. These three events never pass without a gorgeous and elaborate celebration. In this simple way they strive to carry out the tender life lesson: "When you were born you wept while those around you smiled. So live that when you die you alone may smile and those around you weep." And so they laugh and drink wine and sing, for they believe it will have an effect upon the life of the quivering form soon to take its place among them.—London Standard.

Machinery of Memory.

The machinery of memory was thus interestingly described by an authority on the brain: "The act of remembering something," he said, "involves a distinct change in the brain substance. The thing to be remembered is recorded by a little nerve cell. The first time the cell does its work an impression is made upon it. But that impression is apt to wear off unless the action of the cell is repeated, and the oftener this is the case the more fixed becomes the impression, or 'cell memory,' as it is called. Suppose that the work of this particular cell is to enable you to recognize a certain smell. If the impression is made but once, the cell may fail to retain it, but if it is repeated several times a lasting impression will be made, and you will recognize the particular odor when you meet with it again."

Southern Wit.

In the early days of the civil war, says Mrs. D. G. Wright in "A Southern Girl In '61," many northern senators were especially violent in their denunciations of the seceding states, occasionally much to the amusement of their listeners.

On one occasion a western senator ended a speech by declaring that were certain threatened events to occur he would "leave this country and join some other nation. Even the Comanches he would prefer to this government in such a case."

Senator Wigfall of Texas rose in answer and stated in a tone of grave remonstrance that he trusted the senator would consider well before he took such a step, "for the Comanches had already suffered too much from contact with the whites."

A QUEER POKER GAME

IT WAS PLAYED BY TWO STOCKMEN IN A DENVER HOTEL.

The Turn That Came When the Fortunes of Both Men Were Piled on the Table—A Side Bet and a Card That Was Not Shown to the Board.

The old St. James hotel in Denver was one of the landmarks of the city for over a quarter of a century, and many famous sporting men were among its guests. Numerous stories are told of the "stiff" poker games that used to be played there in the late eighties and early nineties of the last century.

A game was played one night between two stockmen, a banker and a mining man. The story goes that the mining man and the banker played until they were "all in," leaving the two stockmen to battle it out. It came up to the "consolation" jack pot, and those who had lingered to see the finish were not disappointed when they expected something spectacular to take place The stakes were running high, the ante being $500, with no betting limit. One of the stockmen opened for $2,500 and was promptly raised before the draw. Then there followed a series of raises and counter raises until the pot contained $11,000 before cards were drawn.

"Gi' me that one," blandly announced the man who had "seen" the last raise. The dealer slipped one card across the table, laid the deck down, relighted his neglected cigar and said unconcernedly, "I'll play these."

Then the betting commenced in earnest. The player had opened, and he led off with $2,500 as a "feeler." The dealer raised a like amount, and the other fellow followed suit. It was plain that one or the other of the men was going to lose his fortune. Checks were written, torn up and made out for larger amounts, and finally mortgage papers on real estate and cattle were passed into the pot. Finally one man said to the other:

"Say, Henry, I'm going to stay with you until everything I've got, right down to the clothes on my back, is represented on the table. Now, I'm in doubt as to some of my property holdings, so I'll make you a proposition. Give me until tonight (it was then 4 a. m.) to find out just where I stand and we'll play the hand out. Meantime let us seal up my hand in one envelope, yours in another and the deadwood in still another. We'll leave the three envelopes in the office safe, to be delivered to both of us together."

The other player agreed, and envelopes and sealing wax were sent for. The hands and remaining cards in the deck were duly sealed and deposited as per arrangement.

Meantime friends of the two players endeavored to get the men together on some sort of compromise proposition, knowing full well that neither could afford to bank his entire fortune on a poker hand, leaving his family destitute, but both men were obdurate and would listen to no proposition to split the pot. An interested and expectant group gathered in the lobby about 8 o'clock in the evening, among them being the man who had opened the pot. They talked together in a friendly manner, speculating upon what would happen when the man who went to look up his assets returned. While they were talking he walked in.

"Well, Henry, I'm ready to resume our little argument," he announced in a matter of fact tone. Then the crowd repaired to the room where the game had been played. The man announced that he had $33,000 to "play back." Securities and certified checks representing this amount were piled on the table. Then, and not until then, did either of the men show signs of nervousness. The opener had drawn a check for $33,000 and started to tear it out of the book when the other man said in a slow, deliberate voice:

"Looks a little strong for either of us, doesn't it, Henry?"

"Well," rejoined the other man, toying with the check, "what would you consider a fair proposition at this stage of the game?"

"It's not gambling, I know," said the other, "but if you want to split the pot and"—

"She's split," calmly announced the man who had opened for $2,500. The currency, gold, checks, mortgage papers and securities were equally divided. Not a word was spoken. Silently the man who opened took up the envelopes, tore them open and laid the two hands on the table, faces downward.

"Bet you a cigar I had you beat," he bantered.

"You're called," said the other, turning over four cards, jacks and sixes. The opener also turned over four cards. They were jacks and sixes.

"I'll bet you," said the dealer, "a thousand dollars that I've still got you beat."

The other man peeped at a corner of his buried card, toyed a moment with a stack of currency and shoved $1,000 to the center. Then, without waiting for the man he had called to show his hole card, he turned up a four spot. The dealer looked at it, smiled, touched the bell and put his hand in the deck. He never told what the other card was.—Denver Times.

A farmer who visited London for the first time was walking along Oxford street, filling his pipe, when a matchboy came up to him with the usual "Lights, sir?" Rev. H. W. Knox and family expect to leave next week for Green Bay, Wis., where Mr. Knox takes the pastorate of the Presbyterian church. Green Bay is a city of 25,000 and the church work there is in good condition. With Mr. Knox' ability as a preacher and business manager there is every reason to hope for substantial growth.

Spectator: The saw mill building has been sold to the Red Lake milling company and will be taken down. Foreman Norman came up from Crookston on Tuesday and with a crew of ten men started work tearing the building down. The planing mill or other buildings are not, we understand, included in the deal.

Plummer Pioneer: S. O. Locken manager for the Clearwater Mercantile Co. arrived here on Tuesday afternoon to get ready for opening up the new store. On Wednesday the directors of the company met with Mr. Locken and began preparation for starting up in business. They have secured the Reed building, and fixtures are being constructed rapidly. Mr. Locken says he expects the store will be ready for business in another week.

Beginning July 1st all mail matters received at the local postoffice, and all other U. S. postoffices, must be counted and weighed, and a record kept of the class of each piece, whether postal card, letter, package etc. besides many other details. This work will greatly increase the labor of the postoffice force. In addition to procuring the cream of negro talent, Richards & Pringle's Famous Georgia minstrels introduce a sensational offering in Marsh Craig, "The Human Enigma" Kirk, the Musical Acrobat; Arthur Prince, Hoop Controler; Clarence Powell, the Sidewalk Talker; Fred Simpson, Trombone Soloist; and the Big Six song and dance, belles and beaux. The vocal part of the program is claimed to be exceptionally strong while the musical numbers will excel anything attempted by the minstrel shows. Never was such a remarkable offering of novolties, embracing such a tempting array of good things as will be seen at the Opera House, June 24.

A meeting of the Adams Presbytery will be held at Crookston next Monday evening when the resignation of Rev. H. W. Knox as pastor of the Presbyterian church will be taken up and acted upon. As stated in the columns several weeks ago Rev. Knox has been made a very flattering offer to take charge of the Presbyterian pastorate at Green Bay, Wisconsin, and while he has been a very active member of the Adams Presbytery, and the members are loathe to see him leave, it is very probable that his resignation will be accepted. The new field will be a much better one for Mr. Knox and there are none who know him but what are pleased at his chance of advancement.

GETS STATE JOB

James E. Ford of this City, Appointed as Special Examiner by Capt. Schaefer.

James E. Ford of this city received word from Public Examiner Anton Schaefer that he had been appointed as a special assistant examiner under chapter 344, laws of 1907, for townships and school districts. Mr. Ford immediately sent in his acceptance and expects to go to St. Paul next week to familiarize himself with his new duties and prepare to qualify.

The Red Lake Falls people will be extremely pleased to learn of Jim's good fortune, as the appointment carries with it a very substantial salary and is work of a nature that Mr. Ford is especially fitted for. He does not expect to remove his family to St. Paul for the present at least, but probably will later in the summer.

THE GAZEELE is pleased to see Jim land this nice job, and it knows that the confidence is not misplaced. There are no better accountants or office men in the state than this same Ford and it is a modest prediction to say that he will be eminently successful.

Thief River Press: The local telephone exchange has been sold by H. Fant to J. M. Bishop for a consideration of $20,000. The deal grew out of the bill in equity filed at Fergus Falls by the Tri-State Telephone company to secure the plant on a mortgage held by the company and which they claimed was in danger of becoming of no value because of alleged acts of omission and commission by Mr. Fant. Mr. Bishop announces that the system will be improved and put in good condition and by so doing, he trusts to put at an end to all controversy over the granting of another franchise, and thus insure the city, having but one telephone system, which is enough for any town.

Dr. Spofford makes his next regular visit to Red Lake Falls, July 7. At Grand View hotel. Remember the date if your eyes trouble you.

"[illegible] know but the girl?" Snow [illegible] "And Brother Brigham would fix her all right—is the houshold of faith to be spoiled?"

"[illegible] they got a railroad coming through it now," said Wright, "and a telegraph, and a lot of soldiers. So don't you count on me, Brother Snow, at any stage of it now or afterwards. I got a pretty sizable family that would hate to lose me. Look out. Here he comes."

Follett now came up, speaking in a cheerful manner that nevertheless chilled even the enthusiasm of the good Bishop Snow.

"Now, gentlemen, just by way of friendly advice to you—like as not I'll be stepping in front of some of you in the next hour. But it isn't going to worry me any, and I'll tell you why. I'd feel awful sad for you all if anything was to happen to me—if the Injuns got me or I was took bad with a chill or a jackrabbit crept up and bit me to death, or anything. You see, there's a train of 25 big J. Murphy wagons will be along here over the San Bernardino trail. They are coming out of their way, almost any time now, on purpose to pick me up. Fact is my ears have been picking up all morning to hear the old bull-whips crack. There were 31 men in the train when they went down, and there may be more coming back. It's a train of Ezra Calkins, my adopted father. You see, they know I've been here on special business, and I sent word the other day I was about due to finish it, and they wasn't to go through coming back without me. Well that half outfit will stop for me—and they'll see me or get pay for me. That's their orders. And it isn't a train of women and babies either. They're such an outrageous rough lot, quick-tempered and all that, that they wouldn't believe the truth that I had an accident—not if you swore it on a stack of Mormon bibles topped off by the life of Joe Smith. They'd go right out and make Amalon look like a whole cavayard of razor-hoofed buffaloes had raced back and forth over it. And the rest of the 2,000 men on Ezra Calkins' pay roll would come hanging around pestering you all with Winchesters. They'd make you scratch gravel, sure!

"Now, let's get to work. I see you'll be awful careful and tender with me. I'll bet I don't get even a sprained ankle. You folks get him, and I'll show you where he said the place was."

Two hours later Follett came running back to where Prudence lay on the saddle blanket in the warm morning sun.

"The wagon train is coming—hear the whips? Now, look here, why don't we go right on with it, in one of the big wagons? They're coming back light, and we can have a J. Murphy that's bigger than a whole lot of houses in this country. You don't want to go back there, do you?"

She shook her head.

"No, it would hurt me to see it now. I should be expecting to see him at every turn. Oh, I couldn't stand that—poor sorry little father!"

"Well, then, leave it all; leave the place to the women, and good riddance, and come off with me. I'll send one of the boys back with a pack mule for any plunder you want to bring away, and you needn't ever see the place again."

She nestled in his arms, feeling in her grief the comfort of his tenderness.

"Yes, take me away now."

The big whips could be heard plainly, cracking like rifle shots, and shortly came the creaking and hollow rumbling of the wagons and the cries of the teamsters to their six-mule teams. There were shouts and calls, snatches of song from along the line, then the rattling of harness, and in a cloud of dust the train was beside them, the teamsters sitting with rounded shoulders up under the bowed covers of the big wagons.

A hail came from the rear of the train and a bronzed and bearded man in a leather jacket cantered up on a small pinto.

"Hello, there, Rool! I'm whoopin' glad to see you!"

He turned to the driver of the foremost wagon.

"All right, boys! We'll make a lay-by for noon."

Follett shook hands with him heartily, and turned to Prudence.

"This is my wife, Lew. Prudence, this is Lew Steffins, our wagon master."

"Shoo, now!—you young cub—married? Well, I'm right glad to see Mrs. Rool Follett—and bless your heart, little girl!"

"Did you stop back there at the settlement?"

"Yes: and they said you'd hit the pike about dark last night, to chase a crazy man. I told them I'd be back with the whackers if I didn't find you. I was afraid some trouble was on, and here you're only married to the sweetest thing that ever—why, she's been crying! Anything wrong?"

"No: never mind now, anyway. We're going on with you, Lew."

"Bully proud to have you. There's that third wagon—"

"Could I ride in that?" asked the girl, looking at the big, lumbering conveyance, doubtfully.

"It carried 6,000 pounds of freight to Los Angeles, little woman," answered Steffins, promptly, "and I guess you to heft over 28 or 30 at the outside. I'll have the box filled in with spruce boughs and a lot of nice bunch grass, and put some comforts over that, and you'll be snug and tidy. You won't starve, either, not while there's meat running."

"And, say, Lew, she's got some stuff back at that place. Let the extra hand ride back with a packjack and bring it on. She'll tell him what to get."

"Sure! Tom Callahan can go."

"And give us some grub, Lew. I've hardly had a bite since yesterday morning."

An hour later, when the train was nearly ready to start, Follett took his wife to the top of the ridge and showed her, a little way below them, the cedar at the foot of the sandstone ledge. He stayed back, thinking she would wish to be there alone. But when she stood by the new grave she looked up and beckoned to him.

"I wanted you by me," she said, as he reached her side. "I never knew how much he was to me. He wasn't big and strong like other men, but now I see that he was very dear and more than I suspected. He was quiet and always so kind—I don't remember that he was ever stern with me once. And though he suffered from some great sorrow and from sickness, he never complained. He wouldn't even admit he was sick, and he always tried to smile in that little way he had, so gentle. Poor, sorry little father!—and yesterday not one of them would be his friend. It broke my heart to see him there so wistful when they turned their backs on him. Poor little man! And see, here's another grave all grown around with sage and the stones worn smooth; but there's the cross he spoke of. It must be some one that he wanted to lie beside. Poor little sorry father! Oh, you will have to be so much to me!"

The train was under way again. In the box of the big wagon, on a springy couch of spruce boughs and long bunch grass, Prudence lay at rest, hurt by her grief, yet soothed by her love, her thoughts in a whirl about her.

Follett, mounted on Dandy, rode beside her wagon.

"Better get some sleep yourself, Rool," urged Steffins.

"Can't Lew. I ain't sleepy. I'm too busy thinking about things, and I have to watch out for my little girl there. You can't tell what these cusses might do."

"There's 30 of us watching out for her now, young fellow."

"There'll be 31 till we get out of this neighborhood, Lew."

He lifted up the wagon cover softly a little later, and found that she slept. As they rode on, Steffins questioned him.

"Did you make that surround you was going to make, Rool?"

"No, Lew, I couldn't. Two of them was already under, and, honest, I couldn't have got the other one any more than you could have shot your kid that day he up-ended the gravy dish in your lap."

"Hell!"

"That's right! I hope I never have to kill anyone, Lew, no matter how much I got a right to. I reckon it always leaves uneasy feelings in a man's mind."

Eight days later a tall, bronzed young man with yellow hair and quick blue eyes, in what an observant British tourist noted in his journal as "the not unpicturesque garb of a border ruffian," helped a dazed but very pretty young woman on to the rear platform of the Pullman car attached to the east-bound overland express at Ogden.

As they lingered on the platform before the train started they were hailed and loudly cheered, averred the journal of this same Briton, "by a crowd of the outlaw's companions, at least a score and a half of most disreputable-looking wretches, unshaven, roughly dressed, heavily booted, slouch-hatted (they swung their hats in a drunken frenzy), and to this rough ovation the girl, though seemingly a person of some decency, waved her handkerchief and smiled repeatedly, though her face had seemed to be sad and there were tears in her eyes at that very moment."

At this response from the girl, the journal went on to say, the ruffians had redoubled their drunken pandemonium. And as the train pulled away, to the observant tourist's marked relief, the young outlaw on the platform had waved his own hat and shouted as a last message to one "Lew," that he "must not let Dandy get gandered up," nor forget "to tie him to grass."

Later, as the train shrieked its way through Echo canyon, the observant tourist, with his double-visored plaid cap well over his face, pretending to sleep overheard the same person across the aisle say to the girl:

"Now we're on our own property at last. For the next 60 hours we'll be riding across our own front yard—and there ain't any keys and passwords and grips here, either—just a plain Almighty God with no nonsense about Him."

Whereupon had been later added to the journal a note to the effect that Americans are not only quite as prone to vaunt and brag and tell big stories as other explorers had asserted, but that in the west they were ready blasphemers.

Yet the couple minded not the observant tourist, and continued to enlarge and complicate his views of American life to the very bank of the Missouri. Unwittingly, however, for they knew him not nor saw him nor heard him, being occupied with the matter of themselves.

"You'll have to back me up when we get to Springfield," he said to her one late afternoon, when they neared the end of their exciting journey. "I've heard that old Grandpa Corson is mighty peppery. He might take you away from me."

Her eyes came in from the brown rolling of the plain outside to light him with their love; and then, the lamps having not yet been lighted, the head of grace nestled suddenly on its pillow of brawn with only a tremulous sigh of security for answer.

This brought his arm quickly about her in a protecting clasp, plainly in the sidelong gaze of the now scandalized but not less observant tourist.

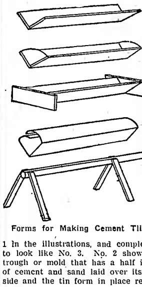
MAKING TILE CEMENT.

It Is Easy Work When the Knack Has Been Learned.

It is surprising how fast one may make tile when once the knack is learned. Make a half dozen little troughs two feet long inside and three inches deep if you are to make a three-inch tile, and four inches deep for four-inch tile. These are quickly nailed together and are begun like No. 1 in the illustrations, and completed to look like No. 3. No. 2 shows a trough or mold that has a half inch of cement and sand laid over its inside and the tin form in place ready to cover with the same material.



Forms for Making Cement Tile.

After the six are filled, the first one may be set hard enough to turn out on some straw to fill again, says Farm and Home. But the tin lining must not be withdrawn until it is hard. One needs a large number of the tins, which can be made out of second-hand tin roof or any tin or stovepipe. They must be just two feet long so they will fit into the troughs.

To make them rapidly, select a sound pole and saw off six feet of it where it is three inches thick. Then nail legs to one end and at a point two and one-half feet from the other end. This leaves a horse that has a horn projecting on which the tin may be readily malleted. Shave the horse flat on top between the legs, to work on. First cut the sheet two feet long and putting the edges together, mallet it together through the middle lengthwise. Then spring it open on the horn and round it over so it will lap well at the top. It must not be riveted because it is to be sprung to take it out when the tile is hard. The tin is shown completed at No. 4 and the horse at No. 5.

The new tile must dry and season slowly so it will not check. To accomplish this sprinkle occasionally with water. I prefer tile that is triangular in shape inside as it runs a deep current of water when laid edge down and is less likely to clog and fill. If used in soil that works into the tile a little form may be cast to place over each joint or flat stones may be used.

CORN ROOT APHIS.

Treatment Which Will Secure Protection Against the Pest.

As a means of replying to very many requests received for full and precise directions for the treatment of seed corn as a protection against injury by the corn root aphis, the Illinois state entomologist, Dr. S. A. Forbes, has prepared the following careful directions. The quantities mentioned are sufficient to treat the seed corn necessary to plant about 45 acres. If a larger or smaller acreage is to be planted, each can easily figure the necessary amount for himself.

1. Mix one pint of pure oil of lemon with one gallon of denatured alcohol or wood alcohol.
2. Put one bushel of seed corn into a tub or half a barrel, or similar vessel large enough to allow vigorous stirring of the corn.
3. Measure out one and a half pints of the mixture of oil of lemon and alcohol.
4. Slowly sprinkle this mixture on the corn, at the same time stirring the latter vigorously with a stout paddle or stick. Do not let the oil collect at the bottom of the vessel for lack of stirring and thorough mixing: Stir vigorously until the oil is well distributed. It should not take five minutes to prepare a bushel of seed.
5. Put the corn thus prepared into a grain sack and it is ready to take to the field for planting. Keep this sack in the shade.
6. Do not prepare more than can be planted in a half a day, unless it is convenient to return to the crib at noon.

Certified Milk.

Certified milk is as clean as it is possible to make it. It is free from objectionable bacteria in quantities sufficient to do any harm and it is of uniform quality. To produce certified milk the animals must be healthy and clean, the premises must be clean, the utensils must be sterilized and every one who works with the milk must have clean hands and clean clothes. All this costs extra money, and the product must bring a higher price to make it pay.

68, BUT PERFECTLY WELL.

The Happy Experience of a New Castle, Pa., Woman.

Mrs. John Mansell, 614 So. Jefferson St., New Castle, Pa., says: "For years I was running down with kidney trouble without knowing what it was, and finally got so bad I was given up. The urinary passages were painful, sometimes scanty and again very profuse. My limbs, feet and ankles bloated dreadfully, and sometimes my whole body. My heart palpitated and I had smothering spells. A week's treatment with Doan's Kidney Pills helped me and a few boxes cured me. At 68 I am strong and well."

Wants the Rod Restored.

The Shanghai Times editor says: The jail has been well administered, but is fuller than it should be, due, I fear, to the abolition of the cangue and bamboo. The ordinary criminal has no great objection to repeated short visits to the jail, but shrinks from a repetition of corporal punishment. Punishment with the bamboo is in vogue throughout China, and here only has it by special edict been abolished. We deprecate the Chinese authorities making this settlement a field for experiment, and will press for the reintroduction of this salutary method of punishment.

An Artistic Idea.

"I don't mind paying for a picture if it's a good, natural likeness," said the rich man to the fashionable artist, to whom he was to sit for his portrait.

"O, it is quite characteristic and natural, I assure you," replied the artist. "I flatter myself that easy attitude with your hand in your pocket is quite a neat touch."

And so it proved when the bill came in.

Wonderful Engineering Work.

The admirable accuracy of the work of civil engineers of the best class is shown in the wonderfully slight deviation of the great Simplon tunnel from the calculations of the men who planned it and executed the work. The tunnel is 12½ miles long. It proved 31 inches longer than it was expected to be. When the two headings came together in the depths of the mountain their levels were less than 3½ inches apart.

AFRAID OF PARALYSIS

A NERVOUS SUFFERER CURED BY DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

The Medicine That Makes Rich, Red Blood and Performs Wonders as a Tonic for the Nerves.

Why are nervous people invariably pale people?

The answer to that question explains why a remedy that acts on the blood can cure nervous troubles.

It explains why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are also for nervous people.

It is because of the intimate relation between the red corpuscles in the blood and the health of the nerves. The nervous system receives its nourishment through the blood. Let the blood become thin, weak and colorless and the nerves are starved—the victim is started on the road that leads to nervous wreck. Nervous people are pale people—but the pallor comes first. Enrich the blood and the nerves are stimulated and toned up to do their part of the work of the body. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills make red blood and transform nervous, irritable, ailing people into strong, energetic, forceful men and women.

Mrs. Harriet E. Porter, of 20 Liberty avenue, South Medford, Mass., says:

"I had never been well from childhood and a few years ago I began to have dizzy spells. At such times I could not walk straight. I was afraid of paralysis and was on the verge of nervous prostration. Then neuralgia set in and affected the side of my face. The pains in my forehead were excruciating and my heart pained me so that my doctor feared neuralgia of the heart. I tried several different kinds of treatment but they did me no good.

"One day my son brought me some of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and I found that they strengthened my nerves. I took several boxes and felt better in every way. There were no more dizzy attacks, the neuralgia left me and I have been a well woman ever since."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are invaluable in anæmia, rheumatism, after-effects of the grip and fevers and in sick headaches, nervousness, neuralgia, and even partial paralysis and locomotor ataxia.

Our booklet "Nervous Disorders, a Method of Home Treatment" will be sent free on request to anyone interested. Write for it today.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box, six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

IDEAS FO THE HOSTESS

Manufacture of Potato Dolls Afforded Amusing Entertainment at One Luncheon—Celebration of Crystal Wedding—"Rag Party" a New Form of Diversion.

After a most delightful luncheon given by a talented hostess, this novel entertainment was provided. The repast had been served at small tables and we were told to retain our places while the young daughter of the house passed to each lady a well-washed potato of rather long, slender shape. Then each was given four small wire hairpins, four black-beaded tacks, two fancy paper napkins with gayly colored borders, and a supply of pins. There were scissors and tubes of library paste close at hand.

The instructions were to build a doll, a prize was offered for the best and poorest specimen. The ladies worked with amazing zeal for this going back to childhood days was thoroughly enjoyed. None of them had ever manufactured "potato" dolls before, but nearly every one confessed to the clothespin variety, and it was surprising to see the array of attractive little figures that emerged from the hands of these erstwhile creative artists.

The hairpins were used for arms and legs, the tacks made eyes, nose and mouth, and it was astonishing the variety of facial expressions achieved. All sorts of garments were made from the napkins, which were pinned and pasted into shape. There were wee babies, children, Japs in kimonas, sunbonnet toddlers, ladies of high and low degree, all acknowledging a common potato for their origin.

When the dolls were displayed upon a table the collection was so fascinating that one of the guests begged for it to be taken to a charity kindergarten in the slums. There the children hailed the treasures with delight and the teacher received an inspiration for a new diversion. The prizes awarded for the best doll was a large sweet potato pie piled high with fluffy meringue, made by a Kentucky "aunty;" the consolation offering was several quarts of new potatoes in a green basket tied with ribbon.

For a Crystal Wedding.

From a Canadian correspondent this time there comes a request for the description of the "Crystal" wedding which is the fifteenth anniversary. The invitations should be written, or, better still, engraved as for any evening party; if desired, the date of marriage and the present date may be at the head of the sheet so the guests may figure for themselves the occasion of the company.

Of course the dining-room table will be the center of attraction, and it should be kept as nearly all white as possible. Use a glass bowl filled with white roses or carnations sprinkled with diamond dust for the centerpiece; glass candlesticks with white shades. Cut glass or rock crystal (should the hostess be fortunate enough to possess it) should hold salted almonds and bonbons.

Serve a salad, sandwiches, ice cream or an ice in tall glasses. The candles placed around the rooms may be coated with diamond dust by first dipping them in mucilage; the effect is very pretty. Place cards may be treated in the same way, also tiny boxes filled with wedding cake; the monogram and date may be put on with gold paint; they make appropriate souvenirs.

Toasts to the host and hostess and a programme of well selected songs add much to the enjoyment of the evening. If desired, the bride and groom's cake may be baked in heart-shaped pans; they are newer than the round or square tins.

If expense does not enter into consideration in preparing for this occasion, the small hand mirrors (doll size) would be charming souvenirs. The date or name could be written on the glass or a card tied to the handle.

A "Rag" Party.

The word "thimbles" on the cards received by 20 young matrons who were frequently entertained at each others houses was the clew to the nature of the afternoon's occupation, but no one was prepared for the kind of sewing provided by the hostess.

"Of course you all know," she said, "that the very newest thing in the rug line is no more, no less, than the old-fashioned rag carpet of our grandmother's day? Only they are no longer carpets, but rugs." So saying she produced boxes of assorted colors of rags cut into strips. Only cotton pieces were used; bits of denim, gingham and outing flannel. They are called "Pilgrim" rugs and by some are designated as "arts and crafts." A pound and a half ball of rags weaves into a square yard rug. A very effective pattern is evolved by using blue rugs woven with a white warp and the ends finished with white knotted fringe. These rugs launder well and are especially adapted to bath and bed-rooms. There is such a rug epidemic sweeping over the land that several men I know have turned the key in their closets; one chap mournfully said that he had only one wearable set of pajamas left and one negligee shirt that "was any good," that his wife had confiscated everything else for her rugs, saying that "it was so much cheaper for her to make the floor coverings than to pay store prices." This man is still reflecting upon the queer notions his wife has of economy. At the shops these creations retail for a goodly sum, so if time is of no consequence a woman with the help of her friends at one or two "sewing bees" may furnish her chambers with very artistic and up-to-date rugs at small expense.

MADAME MERRI.

Cuffs and collars of embroidered linen to be worn with this summer's shirt waists.

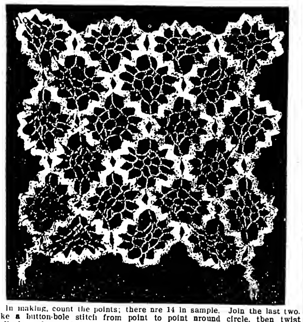
Mourning Hats.

Mourning hats have entirely changed in the last three years. Bonnets have become less frequent, as even widows are wearing hats with brims and net or grenadine veils, after three months of mourning. It is not considered necessary any longer for a woman under 50 to wear a tiny bonnet that just fits the head with its white ruching and strings tied under the chin.

For Tender Feet.

Rest the feet as much as possible by changing the shoes several times a day—even from an old one to a new one is a rest. The muscles of the foot tire in one position, and it is wonderful how a frequent change of shoes rests them. A few drops of ammonia added to the water in which you bathe your feet at night will help to make them comfortable.

Pretty Idea in Rick-Rack Lace



In making, count the points; there are 14 in sample. Join the last two. Make a button-hole stitch from point to point around circle, then twist needle in and out of the stitches (the same as overcasting a seam) all the way around. Draw smooth. It will look like a lace bar. Now make a button-hole stitch between every two points over bar, then run needle through stitches as before and draw up. You will see by the sample how to turn the braid. If you want larger circles count off more points. You can use a crochet hook the same as a needle.

CHOICE OF TWO EVILS.

Request That Was by No Means a Compliment for Papa.

A New York scientist, the father of a large and growing family, has his troubles: One evening his youngest was holding forth in her best style. The mother could do nothing with the child, so the man of science went to the rescue.

"I think I can quiet little Flora," he said. "There's no use humming to her in that silly way. What she wants is real music. The fact that I used to sing in the Glee club at Yale and sang well, too, may make a difference."

Accordingly, the professor took the child and, striding up and down the room, sang in his best manner. He had not finished the second verse of his song, when a ring was heard. The door was opened, and there stood a girl of 14, who said:

"I'm one of the family that's just moved into the flat next to yours. There's a sick person with us, and he says, if it's all the same to you, would you mind letting the baby cry instead of singing to it?"—Success.

ECZEMA COVERED BABY.

Worst Case Doctors Ever Saw—Suffered Untold Misery—Perfect Cure by Cuticura Remedies.

"My son, who is now twenty-two years of age, when four months old began to have eczema on his face, spreading quite rapidly until he was nearly covered. The eczema was something terrible, and the doctors said it was the worst case they ever saw. At times his whole body and face were covered, all but his feet. I used many kinds of patent medicines, to no avail. A friend teased me to try Cuticura. At last I decided to try Cuticura when my boy was three years and four months old, having had eczema all that time and suffering untold misery. I began to use all three of the Cuticura Remedies. He was better in two months; in six months he was well. Mrs. R. L. Risley, Piermont, N. H., Oct. 24, 1905."

PAT SET ONLY ONE LIMIT.

Would Quit When He Was Done With All Things Earthly.

A rich man out in the suburbs who owns a large place has among the many people employed to keep it in shape an Irishman of whom he is particularly fond on account of his unconscious wit, says Harper's Weekly. This Irishman is something of a hard drinker, and, as his income is limited, he is more particular as regards the quantity than the quality of his liquids. The other day the employer, who had been awaiting a good opportunity, remarked in a kind tone, as the closing sentence of a friendly lecture:

"Now, Pat, how long do you think you can keep on drinking this cheap whiskey?"

To which Pat instantly replied:

"All my life, if it doesn't kill me."

The Human Shield.

The advent of Decoration day caused Admiral Dewey, at a recent dinner, to praise the bravery of the American troops during the civil war.

"Both sides alike were brave," he said. "North and south, soldiers and sailors. And the bravery of the raw recruit was a thing to be seen to be believed.

"There used to be circulated, though, a good story about a Connecticut recruit. This young man, after he had gotten initiated, fought heroically; but in his first engagement he was very nervous.

"A chum of his was in the line ahead of him, and when the bullets began to fly, the chum began to dodge.

"Thereupon the recruit shouted excitedly:

"'Hey, Jim, don't duck. I'm behind ye.'"

Cheapens and Improves Coal.

Consul General W. R. Holloway, of Halifax, says that the Canadian commercial agent at Manchester, England, reports an invention at that place for depriving soft coal of its most objectionable feature by abstracting the oils said to produce smoke, and calling the resulting article "coalite," which is something like coke in appearance and which can be furnished at one-third the present cost of coal. Five acres of land near Manchester have been purchased, and large works will be erected for its production.—United States Consul Reports.

AN OLD EDITOR

Found $2000 Worth of Food.

The editor of a paper out in Okla., said: "Yes, it is true when I got hold of Grape-Nuts food, it was worth more than a $2000 doctor bill to me, for it made me a well man. I have gained 25 pounds in weight, my strength has returned tenfold, my brain power has been given back to me, and that is an absolute essential, for I am an editor and have been for 35 years.

"My pen shall always be ready to speak a good word for this powerful nutritive food. I had of course often read the advertisements regarding Grape-Nuts, but never thought to apply the food to my own use, until, in my extremity and sickness the thought came to me that it might fit my case. The statements in regard to the food are absolutely correct, as I have proven in my own case. One very fortunate thing about the food is that while it is the most scientifically made and highly nourishing, concentrated food I have ever known, it has so delicious a taste that it wins and holds friends." Made for Fat Men.

One of the narrow arches in the gallery of the chapel at Columbia university is not exactly symmetrical, although the defect is not noticeable to the casual observer, says the New York Globe. The reason for the widening of the arch after its original construction had rise in a somewhat humorous occurrence. One of the early visitors was a remarkably fat man, who found himself wedged into the arch when he tried to squeeze through and was extricated with difficulty. The builders, recognizing the possibility of other fat people being numbered among the future visitors, decided to widen the arch, sacrificing symmetry and harmony to practical need, as the pier was so constructed as to bear no loss of width on one of its sides.

Novel Competition.

The Commercial Club of Portland, Oregon has adopted a unique method of attracting attention to that city and the Pacific Northwest. It is offering a series of prizes amounting in the aggregate to five thousand dollars cash for the best articles treating of any phase of the resources, scenery irrigation projects, agriculture, horticulture, timber, dairying, history, educational and religious advantages, social conditions, etc., which make that section of the United States desirable to settlers.

One of the conditions of the Competition is that the contestant must secure the publication of his article in a regular edition of some newspaper or other publication dated on or before December 31st 1907 and printed outside of the states of Oregon and Washington. The publication containing the article must be appointed by the Governor of Oregon, not later than February 1st, 1908.

This offer is a novel one and especially interesting as indicating the aggressive spirit of the cities of the northwest in exploiting their advantages. The offer is made however, not so much with a view of having the country "boomed" in the common acceptation of that term, as to have the people of the country generally become more familiar with the North Pacific coast.

PINEAPPLES.

The Juice of This Fruit Is a Great Aid to Digestion.

The word enzyme does not appear to have any connection with pineapple, yet it is the name of the chemical that gives to the luscious fruit the remarkably digestible property which it possesses. The prevailing notion that pineapple juice is excellent for the digestion is supported by medical testimony. Eat a slice of the fruit after dinner, say the doctors, and you will not suffer from dyspepsia.

If you want to see what pineapple can accomplish in the way of digestion, you can easily test it on a piece of raw steak. The action of pineapple juice on meat is to transform it into jelly and then dissolve it when in the human stomach.

Place a slice of the fruit on the raw meat as it lies on a plate, and the upper surface of the steak where the fruit touches it will soon become gelatinous. Enzyme, the active principle of the juice, can be obtained by throwing salt into the juice, thus producing a precipitate.

A good sized pineapple contains two pints of juice, a fact that gives an idea of what a slice of the fruit will do for digestion. If cooked, the pineapple loses its virtue in this respect. It may be asked whether the consumption of the somewhat woody fruit itself is beneficial or not, for that can scarcely be easily digestible.

Without doubt it is the juice which does the good, not the flesh of the pineapple, but the property of the juice is so effective that the eating of the fruit itself can do no harm and may even be beneficial, inasmuch as it takes some of the strength of the juice to dissolve it and so prevents the stomach suffering from the too violent effects of the juice.

Fighting the Current.

Papua has swift streams well stocked with fish. An explorer tells of Papuan fresh water mullet which sometimes weigh as much as fifteen pounds. "These fish are wonderfully provided by nature with an appliance which helps them to combat the extraordinary currents. At one moment you will see them being swept down resistlessly, but suddenly they shoot off into the quieter water and attach themselves to the rocks by a strong sucker near the mouth. There they hang just outside the current, their tails moving gently with it, and when they have recovered their strength they make another dash through the swifter waters."

Observance of the Sabbath.

There was the minister of Tweedsmuir who on a certain Sabbath found a salmon stranded in shallow water and who, being unable conscientiously to take it out on such a day, built a hedge of stones around it and, returning on the morrow, claimed his prize. There was the old farmer who could not go to the kirk because he had neglected to shave on the Saturday night, and he would not profane the day by the use of any edged tool.—Macmillan's Magazine.

A True Fish Story.

Here is a fish story told by a British nobleman: An Irishman had caught a big pike. Noting a lump in its stomach, he cut it open. "As I cut it open there was a mighty rush and a flapping of wings, and away flew a wild duck, and when I looked inside there was a nest, with four eggs, and she had been afther sitting on that nest."

Shocking Precocity.

"What is the result," asked the teacher of the primary class in arithmetic, "when you put two and two together?"

"A kith," lisped the curly headed little girl in the front row.—Chicago Tribune.

There are many diversities of vice, but it is one never failing effect of it to live displeased and discontented.—Seneca.

THE GOLDFINCH.

Changes In Plumage That Are Puzzling to the Novice.

Most every one in America is acquainted with the goldfinch, but many people know the bird by the name of lettuce bird on account of its bright yellow color. Goldfinch is a very appropriate name, as the bright yellow of the male when in breeding plumage is like burnished gold. The female goldfinch is more modestly dressed than her mate. The changes in plumage of the male are very interesting and to the novice somewhat puzzling. Until the student becomes acquainted with the bird he may wonder why he sees no males during the winter. The truth is at this season the flocks of supposed female goldfinches are really of both sexes, the male bird having assumed in the previous fall, usually by the end of October, a plumage closely resembling that of the female and young bird of the year. The male retains this inconspicuous dress until late in February, when one can notice a gradual change taking place in some of the birds. This renewal of feathers is actively continued through March and April, and by the first of May our resplendent bird is with us again. The song period with the male goldfinch continues as long as he wears his gold and black livery, for it commences as early as the middle of March and ends late in August. Goldfinches are very cleanly in their habits and bathe frequently. Their nests are exquisite pieces of bird architecture, the inside being lined with the softest plant down. The mother bird is the builder, her handsome consort during the nest building time devoting most of his efforts to singing to cheer his industrious mate.—Philadelphia Press.

THE SOLAR SYSTEM.

Some Facts Which Give an Idea of Its Immensity.

In all the heavens, with the exception of passing meteors or meteorites, not one body occupies a position closer to earth than the moon, which is some 240,000 miles away — very far, of course, side by side with any earthly distances, but a mere fraction side by side with other astronomical distances. Next to the moon our nearest occasional neighbor is Venus, and then Mars. Both Venus and Mars, however, are often farther away from us than the sun, which remains always at somewhere about the same distance, roughly at from 90,000,000 to 93,000,000 miles.

This dividing space between sun and earth is of great importance in thinking about the stars, and it should be clearly impressed upon the mind. Next to the sun in point of nearness come the more distant planets—Jupiter, which is about five times as far from the sun as our earth is; Saturn, nearly twice as far as Jupiter; Uranus, nearly twice as far as Saturn, and Neptune, nearly three times as far as Saturn. All these planets belong to our sun, all are members of his family, all are part of the solar system. The size of the solar system as a whole, consisting thus of the sun and his planets, including our earth, may be fairly well grasped by any one taking the trouble to master two simple facts. They are these, that our earth is roughly about 92,000,000 miles away from the sun and that Neptune, the outermost planet of the solar system, is nearly thirty times as far distant from the sun as our earth is.—Chambers' Journal.

AN ODD BIRD.

The Kiwi of New Zealand Has Some Remarkable Peculiarities.

That queer bird, the kiwi, is a native of New Zealand. Its remarkable peculiarities are, first, the apparent absence of wings, as the plumage so covers the small, rudimentary, sticklike appendage of a wing that none whatever is apparent. The situation of the nostrils at the bill's extremity is a second peculiar feature. While hunting for earthworms it probes the soft ground, making a continual snuffing sound. Thus the scent is evidently of great help in finding food and the reason for the position of the nostrils quite apparent.

A third peculiarity is the very disproportionate size of the egg in comparison to the bird, it being a little less than one-fourth the bird's own weight. One kiwi's egg found weighed fourteen and one-half ounces, while the bird weighed just under four pounds (sixty-four ounces) and was about the size of an ordinary hen.

The plumage of the kiwi is a dull brown streaked with light gray, and the body resembles a miniature hay shock, rather badly hacked off at the rear part, as nature has not provided the kiwi with such decoration as a tail. The absence of wings is compensated for by its swiftness of foot, and the large, clumsy looking legs, which are sometimes used as weapons, are placed far back on the oddly shaped body.—St. Nicholas.

That Was All.

A young girl who is always trying some new thing was present once when the doctor set a neighbor's broken arm. She was sure that she knew exactly how it was done and rather anxious to put her new knowledge into practice. Some time later a hen out in the chicken yard broke its leg. The girl directly announced that she meant to set it "and make it as good as new." Accordingly it was put into a plaster cast and left for the proper length of time to knit. When the day came to take off the cast the girl ran out to the henhouse in great eagerness to see the result. Presently there was a scream that brought every member of the family to her side. The chicken was jumping miserably over the ground sidewise instead of directly forward. You know a hen's leg has a crook. Well, she had crooked it the wrong way, that was all.

Aliens In Old London.

Here is a curious report of the aliens in London in the year 1567: "There being a great increase of foreigners in the city, her majesty ordered the lord mayor to take the name, quality and profession of all strangers residing within the city of London." The list was headed by the item, "Scots, 40." Other nations were represented by "French, 428; Spaniards and Portuguese, 45; Italians, 140; Dutch, 2,030; Burgundians, 44; Danes, 2; Liegeois, 1."

Shark's Tail For Luck.

Attached to the extreme end of the bowsprit of a sailing vessel there may sometimes be seen a piece of some material that looks remarkably like leather. This seeming piece of leather is really a shark's tail. It is placed there because the sailors think that it augurs good luck, believing that pleasant voyages will be their lot while it remains there. Instead of the bowsprit the tail is at times nailed to the top of one of the masts.—London King.

Different.

"Why don't you elope with her?"

"But, good gracious, man, if you are perfectly willing for me to marry your daughter I cannot see any object to be attained by our eloping."

"Can't you? How will it be if I offer you half of what I save on the wedding?"—Houston Post.

The Main Point.

"What do you think? That boss politician says he has divorced himself from politics."

"Then I'll bet he secured alimony."—Baltimore American.

SUMMER SCHOOL ON

Four Weeks' Session Starts in Charge of Conductor C. S. Yaeger.

The four weeks' session of the teachers' training school for Red Lake county was commenced Monday morning at the high school building in this city.

The school is in charge of Professor C. S. Yaeger, the popular Fosston educator, with A. M. Dunton, Mario Ring and Mary Gardener as instructors.

The attendance on the opening day was not particularly large, but was fairly satisfactory, and it is thought that after the Fourth the number of teachers attending will be materially increased.

First and second grade work is being taught and Superintendent McAnulty is desirous that all who expect to try for first grade certificates attend the training school.

Prof. Yaeger has the reputation of being one of the best training school conductors in the work, and has always been highly successful with his schools in the past. The other instructors are also recommended highly as competent people and the school this year should be one of marked success.

The Red Lake county teachers have ever been enthusiastic in their support of the summer school, and there is every reason to believe that next week will see a lot more of them in attendance.

CHANGE IN HOTEL.

Krueger & Son Now in Charge of Grand View.

A change in the management of the Grand View hotel was announced Monday, when W. H. Krueger stepped out as proprietor and Fred Krueger and son Carl, as Krueger & Son assumed control of the business.

"Billy" still retains the saloon property and will devote his spare time to outside interests. His family moved into the Fred Krueger house on Champagne avenue.

The venerable Fred Krueger and his estimable wife need no introduction to the people of the northwest as hotel keepers, as for a number of years they successfully conducted the Grand View. The active management of the business will be borne by Carl Krueger, who is known as a thorough business man and popular young fellow.

THE GAZETTE trusts that both the new and old firms may continue to prosper in the rearrangement of their affairs.

A Pretty Wedding.

The Northwood, North Dakota, Gleaner, gives the following interesting account of the wedding of Carl E. Peterson, of this city, to Miss Gina Kaasa, of Northwood:

At the residence of the bride at 3:30 p. m., on Wednesday, June 26th 1907, Miss Gina Kaasa, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. O. Kaasa, was united in marriage to Carl Elmer Peterson, Rev. J. D. Runsvold officiating. The beautiful young bride was charmingly attired in white voil over taffeta, and wore white roses, while the bridesmaid, Miss Osina Kaasa, sister of the bride, was becomingly attired in white, and wore pink carnations. The groom and best man, Thomas Forde, were attired in the conventional black and wore pink carnations.

There were in the neighborhood of 125 present at the wedding, and all partook of a very sumptuous wedding dinner, and the merry-making extending far toward the small hours of the morning.

The bride has grown to womanhood among an ever-widening circle of warm friends, and is a very popular and accomplished young lady, of winning manners, and many charms, and a host of people of the vicinity and over the country will wish her joy and happiness.

The groom is a popular and prosperous young newspaper man of Red Lake Falls, Minn., where the twain will make their future home. Mr. Peterson impresses all who have met him with being a most worthy young man, of many estimable qualities, and has the well-wishes of a host of people who have made his acquaintance during his brief sojourn here.

The Gleaner joins a host of friends in congratulations, and wishes the happy young pair a wealth of happiness and prosperity. Mr. and Mrs. Peterson were the recipients of many beautiful and costly presents.

JOB IS CINCHED

Red Lake Falls Concert Band Will Play at Minnesota State Fair.

Word was received Tuesday from D. S. Hall, member of the Minnesota state fair board, that all arrangements were completed and the Red Lake Falls concert band would play an engagement at the Minnesota state fair during the first week in September.

The dates of the band's engagement are not exactly settled but will be three and possibly four days likely Wednesday, Thursday Friday and Saturday, September 4. 5, 6 and 7.

This will surely be a big ad for Red Lake Falls and Red Lake county, and the band boys and people generally feel grateful to Mr. Hall for his efforts in their behalf. Active practice is already commenced in order that the band may have a repertoire of selections second to no band in the state on this occasion, and under Prof. Maxwell's competent guidance there can be no question but what the organization will acquit itself creditably on this occasion.

The chance will be an excellent one to advertise the advantages of Red Lake Falls, and the co-operation of the Commercial club and citizens generally should be forthcoming to make the trip a triumph long to be remembered.

THE USUAL DEAL.

Thief River Papers Twist Facts Regarding Tournament.

The report of the firemen's tournament held here week before last given in the Thief River Press of last week was enough to cause a hearty laugh from all acquainted with the facts, and as the Press has been prone to do in the past year or so, the truth was utterly ignored and a general misrepresentation of matters in general was indulged in.

THE GAZETTE does not desire in any manner to make capital out of the tournament outcome, at the best it is not desired by the people of Red Lake Falls that the pleasure of that event be marred by controversy, but for the benefit of those who might be interested it will state a few facts. The Press tells its readers that Warren won the most money, Thief River next and Red Lake Falls third. This is manifestly untrue and the father of the Press article knew it. Of five big races Red Lake Falls won four firsts, and Warren won the other. In one or two of the minor events the only fast Thief River firemen got first place, but the aggregate of prize money won by Thief River was not within one hundred and twenty-five dollars of the amounts secured by either Red Lake Falls or Warren. Counting the parade prizes of fifty dollars, for which Red Lake Falls did not compete, Warren won approximately the same amount as did Red Lake Falls, both getting about $300 in prize money. Thief River's share was less than $200 so just how the Press figures out that they were second best in the events is a mystery yet unsolved.

The facts are that the Press does not now nor did is ever desire to be fair or honest. The Thief River delegation at the tournament was treated fairly and honestly on all occasions and everything was done to give them and all other visitors a first-class time. The Red Lake Falls firemen do not desire to claim any great glory from the record they made but they do like a fair deal and not a premediated lot of lies like the last week's Press fathered.

A REAL BALL GAME

Thief River and Red Lake Falls Cross Bats in Sensational Contest.

One of the best exhibitions of the national game ever given in the west was played at Thief River Falls last Sunday, between a team representing Thief River Falls and the local team of this place.

The Thief River enthusiasts were "plugged" to the limit for the occasion, and the line-up shows that but three Thief River players were in the game, Fuller on first, Bergen in left field and Nason on second. Carle and Holstein, the fast Indian battery of the Warren professional team, Weaver, the big shortstop and Belcourt, the fast third baseman from Warren, and Peek, the star Mahnomen Indian player composed the rest of the line-up, and this bunch proved to be one of the fastest aggregations of ball players that was ever assembled in the northwest. To go up against this Red Lake Falls had two hired men, Emerson and Beaulieu, a battery from the White Earth country, and played seven of her home boys, who, however, can play ball alongside of the best professionals in the north country.

The game itself was one of those heart disease contests read about in the rule books, and for seventeen long innings these teams battled for supremacy, the Thief River aggregation finally getting the winning run in the seventeenth inning and bringing the game to a close with the score 3 to 2 in their favor.

Red Lake Falls scored one tally in the first inning and blanked Thief River. Both were blanked in the second and in the third Thief River got one man across the plate tieing the score. From then on until the sixteenth inning it was a case of one, two, three and out, and the long string of goose eggs looked as if someone was trying to write out in figures John D. Rockefeller's daily income.

In the first half of the sixteenth by some good hitting and base running Red Lake Falls scored again, putting them one ahead. The first man up for Thief River in the last half of the inning went out promptly from Emerson to first base. The next man got a single, and then stole second, the next up struck out, making two men out with a runner on second base. This was Peek the speedy Mahnomen Indian and he made a daring try for third. The ball was snapped to Healy and Peek was tagged easily enough, but the runner and baseman were so badly mixed up that the umpire claimed he did not see the play and called Peek safe on third. The next batter nailed a swift liner at Pokezwinski on short, and Pucks went after it to end the game, but fate decreed otherwise and the ball bounded away from his mitt and before he could recover it Peek was safe at home, tieing the score. In the seventeenth inning a couple of the foxy Indians on the Thief River side managed to get in front of pitched balls and got bases, when a single netted Thief River the third and winning run. The crowd of rooters interferred with the Red Lake Falls players in the last few innings, and appeared determined to win even if they had to carry one of their players around the diamond by main force.

Red Lake Falls got fourteen hits off Carle, while Thief River got but seven off Emerson. Our boys were unlucky in batting, however, as long drives that looked like homers were pulled out of the sky by the fast Indian fielder, Peek.

Both pitchers were given perfect support and the game was one long to be remembered by those who witnessed it. Red Lake Falls is particularly well pleased with the showing made, as it proves conclusively that with a strong battery the home boys need not be afraid of any of the teams in the north country. The score by innings was as follows:

ANOTHER WRECK.

Great Northern Freight Gets Into One More Mix-up.

The north bound Great Northern freight was wrecked about six miles north of here last Friday morning and effectively tied up traffic for nearly twenty-four hours.

A big refrigerator car in the train went to the bad in some manner or other, and before the train was stopped, a long stretch of track was torn up and several cars went off. The northbound passenger was held here all day, while the wrecker was clearing up the muss, and did not get away on the trip until after six o'clock, returning at about one in morning. In the meantime the wreckage has all been picked up and the track fixed permanently, traffic resuming its normal condition again Saturday.

From the number of wrecks on this line in the past year caused by these refrigerator cars, it would seem that the Great Northern would be afraid to haul them on this branch.

MEETING A FIASCO.

County Seat Petition Still Resting Serenely In Its Safe.

The meeting of the board of commissioners called to act on the county seat removal petition, held here on Monday turned out to be a fiasco pure and simple and absolutely nothing was accomplished.

A big delegation of Thief Riverites drove down early in the day, prepared to put up one of their usual bluffing games, but from the tired expression they wore when they left in the afternoon for their own burg, it was apparent that they were not taking the court house along with them.

The Thief Riverites have a habit of thinking that all they have to do when they want anything is to say so and take it, but it appears from past events that they somtimes overestimate themselves.

Just at the present time the counseat scrap is in a dormant state and probably wont move around much until after dog days.

Hallock was Pleased.

Editor Bouvette, of the Hallock Enterprise, had a good time at the tournament here last week, and told his readers last week, all about it as follows:

One of the most successful and best attended tournaments in the history of the Northern Minnesota Firemen's association was held at Red Lake Falls last week. The people of that place spared no time money, or efforts to make things agreeable and enjoyable to visitors and if we judged of the verdict of our firemen who were present during the entire session, the Red Lake Falls people succeeded in carrying out their aim immenaely. Beside the competitions usual at a firemen's tournament, there were numerous other attractions to entertain the crowd and pleasure seekers. Truly the key of the town was turned over to the visitors, and though the "lid" was removed and pleasure resorts of all descriptions were given full sway day and night, the throng of visitors, which numbered in thousands did not abuse their priveleges for not a drunk or disorderly person was seen during the entire session. The banner or championship race which was one of the important events of the tournament, was won by the Warren fire department, other prizes were won by different departments of the association. Though Hallock was there with a good number, it did not compete in any of the events, but the Hallock baseball team crowned itself with glory in winning the big baseball game of the tournament by defeating Red Lake Falls by a score of 5 to 3. J. A. Bray, the man that put up the "dough" to bring the Black Duck department to Hallock three years ago, was there in his usual spirit of goodfellowship, and he made it his special business to find the Hallock delegation.

A SPECIAL TERM

Judge Watts Will Hold Short Session Here Friday of Next Week.

The Honorable William Watts, judge of the fourteenth judicial district will hold a special term of court in this city Tuesday of next week, July 9.

At this time nine applicants for final citizenship papers will appear before the court to make request for naturalization and the applications will be considered by the judge. It is understood that four of the applications do not comply with the new law and will be refused citizenship papers. The recent law in this respect is very strict and provides that parties desiring final papers must make application to the clerk of the district court at least ninety days before a term of court. Nine applicants have appeared before Clerk Johnson but it is stated that four or them will be denied papers at this time.

Besides the granting of citizenship papers, it is thought that the court will try several cases while in session next week. There are one or two cases continued from the spring calender that will be up for trial, besides a new case or two that may be called. It is probable from the outlook that three days or so will be occupied with court work.

A Great Exhibition.

Never in its history have the assurances of a great exhibition been so pronounced as for the Winnipeg Exhibition July 13-20. The attendance this year will be a record breaker the exhibits of a number and character never before seen in Western ern Canada, and the attractions thrilling in their spectacular daring and novel in the extreme in their nature.

The fireworks will be on a scale never surpassed in Canada and certainly nothing ever approached the wonderful programme outlined by the Hand Company in connection with the presentation of the "siege of Edinburg Castle," and the realistic and picturesque tournament.

STATE LAND SALE

State Auditor Iverson Disposes of Considerable Land Here Monday.

State Auditor S. G. Iverson, accompanied by F. D. Sherman, of St. Paul, were here Monday and in the afternoon Auditor Iverson conducted a sale of state and school lands at the court house.

A good crowd of bidders was present but no particularly spirited bidding resulted, most of the land being bought at the appraised price. A greater part of the land offered for sale at this time was bid in and Auditor Iverson was well pleased with the outcome.

In conversation with a GAZETTE reporter, Mr. Iverson stated that the sales throughout the north country during the past few weeks had been very satisfactory and at every point where he was advertised to hold a sale he found a good crowd of bidders. Minnesota lands, according to Mr. Iverson, are in great demand at the present time, and the results of the extensive advertising in other states done by the state auditors office during the past year or two is every day being felt.

THE HAYWOOD TRIAL.

The State in the trial at Boise, Idaho, made dramatic production and proof of the Goddard bomb, and besides offering further contributions of the testimony of Harry Orchard against William D. Haywood, secured a ruling under which a number of the denunciatory articles published in the Miners' Magazine, official orgao of the Western Federation of Miners, will be admitted in evidence.

The prosecution in the Steunenberg murder trial offered one of the most important pieces of evidence against William D. Haywood when, recalling Harry Orchard for re-direct examination, it introduced and secured the admission of four letters tending to show that Haywood, during the fall of 1905, when Orchard swears he was engaged on various crimes for the federation leaders, had participated in a plan to deceive Mrs. Orchard the second, of Cripple Creek, as to the whereabouts of her husband.

The Haywood trial was suspended one day that Harry Orchard might be taken to court at Caldwell, and the case against him for murdering Steunenberg postponed to the next term of court.

The prosecution in the Steunenberg murder trial, entering in carnest upon the substantiation and corroboration of Harry Orchard's testimony, showed a continuous thread of evidence connecting George Pettibone's store in Denver with Orchard at San Francisco engaged on the Bradley murder plot, partly another direct line by which it is hoped to show that Haywood engaged and paid Steve Adams for the same desperate work, and added special touches of confirmation to Orchard's general story.

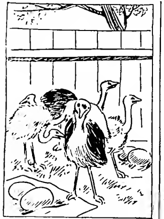
RUNS OSTRICH RANCH

MRS. PEARSON MAKES BUSINESS OF RAISING BIG BIRDS.

Has Just Started First Farm in Cuba—Feathered Animals Just Big, Healthy Idiots, She Says.

New York.—Mrs. Kotherloe Pearson of Phoenix Ariz., and Havana, Cuba, is not only the ostrich queen of the western hemisphere, but of the world at large. Her ostrich farm near Phoenix is the largest breeding ranch in America, and the farm near Havana on which she has just settled 45 birds is the first of its kind in Cuba. She owns more birds than any other woman ostrich farmer on the face of the earth.

"To begin at the beginning of my experience with ostriches I must tell you that my husband first bought a farm and a few birds near Jacksonville, Fla.," said Mrs. Pearson when talking to a reporter. "Mr. Pearson was the manager of the theater on Union square known as Keith's.



Young Chicks Just Hatched Out.

"Shortly after our marriage he developed consumption and we had to go south for his health. After a few years, the climate not having proved beneficial, he decided to go to Phoenix. We sold out in Florida and started breeding ostriches on the Phoenix farm with 250 birds.

"My husband was becoming more feeble every day. I tried to do my duty, and as a result I learned all the ins and outs in breeding birds and selling feathers.

"Since my husband's death I have increased the Phoenix flock to 980 breeders and the acreage to 2,000, making it the largest breeding farm in America. On the Havana farm there are at present only 27 acres and 45 birds. It is only an experiment, and I do not think it wise to get more birds until after these have proved the healthfulness of the climate.

"While in Arizona and Florida we never lost a grown bird except through accident.

"Ostriches mate when they are about three and one-half years old, and, like pigeons, remain together, entirely faithful, until they die. At least I have been told that they mate for life, and so far as I know it is true, though, as I said before, I never knew one to die a natural death. In case of an accident I have known the widowed bird to accept a second mate, but not until after several years.

"They usually lay two nests of eggs of from 12 to 14 each, and you can count on getting an increase of from 10 to 25 chicks. I have often known a pair of good breeders in a good season to hatch every egg and raise every chick.

The ostrich is as senseless an animal as exists. So far as I am able to judge they are absolutely and entirely without brains.

"You can teach them nothing, and it makes no difference how long you feed them or how kind you are, they never even get to recognize you. They know their mate, and that is, I believe, as far as their power of recognition goes.

"While I have heard the men on the farm say they didn't have sense enough to follow a leader, I have noticed that if a bird in one pen began to run, pretty soon every bird on the farm was running—for no apparent reason, just running. When they are in full feather they make a pretty sight in running, as they hold out their wings, and so show the beautiful plumes underneath.

"They do take pride in their plumage. When they are first plucked they become very sulky and seem to wish to hide themselves. If a plucked bird is turned with the unplucked, they fall on him tooth and nail, and the poor fellow is made to suffer for his loss.

"Ostriches are plucked every eight months. I use the word plucked, though the feathers are seldom pulled. When ripe they are cut, and later when the old quills have become perfectly dry they are drawn from the sockets by means of a pair of tweezers. This is not the slightest bit painful to the birds, and there is no blood drawn.

"A healthy ostrich, and I never saw a grown bird that was not healthy, will yield from $30 to $50 worth of feathers a year. As year-old birds are now selling in Arizona for $100 apiece for the South African breed, and $50 more for Nubians, you can judge the yearly profits on a pair of good breeders."

A FIND IN ANCIENT RHODES.

Rock Carved in Relief of a Greek Ship Discovered by Danish Explorers.

New York.—The Royal Academy of Sciences and Letters at Copenhagen is reaping a rich reward from the expedition it sent in 1902 to Lindos, a small town on the south coast of Rhodes, once a great island home of Greek culture in the Aegan sea. Since the Danes began to dig deep into its soil they have unearthed the larger part of its beautiful Acropolis, a fine temple and ancient stairway of remarkable workmanship and an enormous amount of statuettes, vases and other antiquities.

Relief Carving of Ancient Greek Ship.

The Acropolis of Liodos was especially rich in the signatures of artists who had beautified it. Before the Danes began their work only 12 of these signatures had been found, but the Danish explorers have added 74 names of men, several of whom made reputations that still survive.

The most curious discovery of all is described and pictured in the last report of the society. While the party were excavating along the face of an ancient wall built some 200 years before the Christian era, they came to the edge of a carving in the rock.

They followed it eagerly for days before they knew certainly what it represented. Finally they brought the whole carving into view and it proved to be a representation in relief of the stern of an ancient Grecian vessel.

A plaster cast made from it is now in the museum at Copenhagen and experts who have seen either the original at Lindos or the cast at Copenhagen say that it is a faithful representation of an ancient ship. The relief is in no respect embellished for decorative effect, but is a reproduction, perhaps on a slightly smaller scale, of the stern of a Greek vessel of the Hellenic epoch.

Some of the coins of that time show reliefs of vessels and a considerable number of representations of ships have been discovered. The largest is now in the Palazzo Spada and the resemblance between it and the relief found at Lindos is very striking. The relief, however, has far more detail, and it was a splendidly executed piece of work.

On the side of the ship an inscription was cut into the stone showing that the relief was not meant merely as an ornamentt. It was hewn out of the rock to form the base of a statue in bronze in honor of Hagesandros. The statue has not been found, but the remains of an iron fence erected in front of the relief were unearthed.

PEARL WIGHT ACCEPTS POST.

New Orleans Banker to Become Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Washington.—Pearl Wight of New Orleans, the Republican national committeeman of Louisiana, has accepted the post of commissioner of internal revenue, to become effective on December 1. Mr. Wight has a number of important business matters which he wants to adjust and settle prior to taking up the duties of the office. Pending his assumption of the work a commissioner ad interim has been appointed by the president.

Col. Wight is a product of Maine. Born in South Penobscot, at 16 he entered a dry goods store in Rockland as a clerk, and many there now recall what a green country youth he was. His employers sent him to Oil City, Pa., to manage a branch store. He became a traveling salesman for a flour concern and eventually drifted to New Orleans. There he founded a big supply house in the reconstruction days and invested heavily in vessels and timber lands, amassing a large fortune. He has been a prominent figure in Louisiana Republican politics for years and is the state's national committeeman.

FAILED IN SMALL THINGS.

Congressman Evidently Was No Hero to His Wife.

There is a certain congressman who, whatever authority he may hold in the councils of state, is of comparatively minor importance in his own household. Indeed, it has been unkindly intimated that his wife is "the whole thing" in their establishment.

Representative and Mrs. Blank had been to Baltimore one afternoon. When they left the train at Washington, on their return, Mrs. Blank discovered that her umbrella, which had been intrusted to the care of her husband, was missing.

"Where's my umbrella?" she demanded.

"I'm afraid I've forgotten it, my dear," meekly answered the congressman. "It must still be in the train."

"In the train!" snorted the lady. "And to think that the affairs of the nation are intrusted to a man who doesn't know enough to take care of a woman's umbrella!"—Success Magazine.

PURIFIED LIFE INSURANCE.

Benefits from New Law, Which Remains Substantially Unchanged.

Through the influence of Gov. Hughes, the New York Legislature decided to make no radical changes in the new insurance law. It was pointed out by Gov. Hughes that the New York law has already accomplished widespread reforms, with proportionate benefits to policyholders, and that it should be given a thorough trial before any amendments were seriously considered. It is estimated that the cost of the mismanagement of the past did not average more than 20 cents to each policyholder, while the benefits to present and future policyholders will amount to many times more and be cumulative besides. The speed craze of the big companies and the excessive cost of securing new business was the most extravagant evil of the old managements. Under the new regime the cost of new business has already been greatly reduced, along with other economies.

The showing made by the Equitable Life Assurance Society in its report for 1906 was a strong argument against meddling with the new law. In the Equitable alone there was a saving of over $2,000,000 in expenses, besides an increase in the income from the Society's assets amounting to as much more. The ratios of the Equitable's total expenses to its total income was 19.42% in 1904, 17.38% in 1905, and only 14.48% in 1906. The dividends paid to Equitable policyholders in 1906 amounted to $7,289,734, which was an increase of more than 9% over 1905.

While the Equitable made a better showing than any other big company, all reported radical economies and under such conditions the Legislature wisely decided to leave the law substantially as it stands.

Forgetting Something.

When the train that conveyed President Roosevelt through Virginia on his last trip south stopped at Charlottesville, a negro approached the president's car and passed aboard a big basketful of fine fruit, to which was attached the card of a prominent grower.

In course of time the orchardist received a letter of acknowledgment from the White House expressing the president's appreciation of the gift, and complimenting the donor upon his fruit. The recipient of the letter was, of course, greatly pleased, and, feeling sure that his head gardener would be much interested in the letter, he read it to him. The darky who served in the capacity mentioned listened gravely, but his only comment was:

"He doan' say nothin' 'bout sendin' back de basket, do he?"—Success Magazine.

The Camera Fiend's Wanderlust.

As the sun day by day ascends the heavens and the actinic value of his light increases, rhapsodizes the editor of the American Amateur Photographer, there seizes us once more the fervor of the enthusiast. From the high shelf down comes the camera, the plate holders are loaded, and we tramp across the green fields looking for pictures—or pretending to. For half the cause of our wandering has naught to do with the black box we carry with us. The primitive instinct for change, the ancestral wanderlust, it is, that has seized us and driven us forth to nature.

WENT TO TEA

And It Wound Her Bobbin.

Tea drinking frequently affects people as badly as coffee. A lady in Salisbury, Md., says that she was compelled to abandon the use of coffee a good many years ago, because it threatened to ruin her health and that she went over to tea drinking, but finally, she had dyspepsia so bad that she had lost twenty-five pounds and no food seemed to agree with her.

She further says: "At this time I was induced to take up the famous food drink, Postum, and was so much pleased with the results that I have never been without it since. I commenced to improve at once, regained my twenty-five pounds of flesh and went some beyond my usual weight.

"I know Postum to be good, pure and healthful, and there never was an article, and never will be, I believe, that does so surely take the place of coffee, as Postum Food Coffee. The beauty of it all is that it is satisfying and wonderfully nourishing. I feel as if I could not sing its praises too loud." Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

HENRY'S FOOLISH SUGGESTION.

"You seemed to enjoy the play thoroughly," said Mr. Henpeck.

"Oh, it was awfully funny," replied his wife. "I laughed so much that I fairly ached all over.

"Funny part that was where the man fooled his wife and was out with another woman while the mother of his children was at home telling them what a noble fellow he was, because she thought he was working overtime for their benefit.

"I thought I'd die at the ridiculousness of it. I never saw anything in my life that was half so funny. How cleverly he pulled the wool over her eyes, and what a fool he made of her. Dear me, I have to laugh out loud, even now, whenever I think of it."

"Yes, it was great. I'm so glad you enjoyed it. I suppose if I were to do the things that man did you'd have a good laugh over my cleverness, and—"

"Henry! How dare you suggest such a thing? Remember that our innocent children are asleep beneath this roof."—Chicago Record-Herald.

IDEAS IN ENTERTAINMENTS

Two Good Suggestions for Fourth of July Parties--How to Get Up and Serve a Strawberry Luncheon--Dandelion Party That Was Voted a Great Success--For Golf Players.

For the Fourth of July.

There are lovely "Fourth of July" postal cards out; just the thing to use for invitations to affairs to be given on that day, also for place cards. To delight the children, invest in a few of the larger paper animals which are to be inflated and sent sailing skyward.

With a little careful forethought an interesting contest may be arranged. Have them draw lots for the animals, and then give a prize of a bunch of "crackers" to the one whose animal soars the highest. All sorts of contests may be planned for the lawn—carrying lemons on a fork to a given point, a hopping race (on one foot), eating rice with chopped sticks, etc.

Scarlet geraniums, white carnations and blue larkspur make a delightful combination for this great holiday table piece. Make the place cards of scarlet paper to resemble giant firecrackers, if it is too expensive to buy them at the favor counter. The snapping cracker motto caps come in red, white and blue; some of them have tiny metal cannon attached. A novel way to distribute these trifles is to put them in a tissue paper bag made from red, white and blue and suspend by tri-colored ribbon. Give each person a chance to break the bag by striking it with a cane; when the bag bursts there will be a shower of these gay papers and a merry scramble to get one.

June is the season when these luscious berries are in their prime and a luncheon with them for the basis is a very pretty affair. Use a brown rustic basket for the centerpiece filled with large red berries, vines and leaves. If possible to obtain, get the real plants. At each place have a white candle with a shade of crushed strawberry color. Serve first five unhulled berries on a leaf-covered plate, with a neat pile of pulverized sugar in the center. Instead of plates small baskets are suitable for these berries, standing them on a service plate; the place card may be tied to the handle. Tomato soup comes next, then a salmon croquette, new potatoes and beet salad. The last course will be individual strawberry shortcakes. With these pass a bowl of whipped cream for those who wish it, as it is a good rule never to serve any fruit with cream on it, as many people dislike milk of cream with a fruit acid. During the afternoon lemonade may be served with strawberries floating on top.

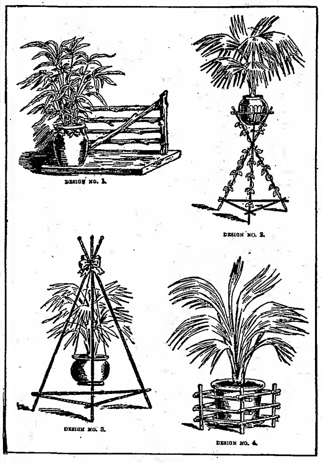
A miniature links was the decorative scheme in the center of the table, golf bags and sticks were the personal souvenirs at each place, and the guests came directly from a morning game, so were hungry for the plain but appetizing menu. The maid serving had her cap adorned with the colors of the club to which all belonged, and candy was made in round balls. Iced bouillon was served first, followed by cold tongue and jellied chicken, hot rolls, shoestring potatoes, asparagus salad, barley duc and cheese. Chocolate ice cream was served in ball moulds and the cakes were sponge drops rolled in grated cocoanut.

Was there ever a child who did not love dandelions? This gorgeous little flower is first with us in the spring and even stray blossoms may be found late in the fall. A field fairly carpeted with these yellow stars gave the idea for this party. No sooner thought of than a dozen children had received notes written in white ink on round pieces of yellow paper asking them to assemble in Parson's field at two o'clock one June afternoon. Sewing tables were set under a couple of trees covered with white crepe paper table cloths. In the center of each was a mound of dandelions, bunches were at each place and there was a basket for each guest.

When all had arrived there was a contest to see who could gather the most flowers in a half hour; after the spoils were counted the boy and the girl having the most were crowned with dandelion wreaths. Then they made rings, chains and bracelets out of the stems and told fortunes by the full blown blossoms. At five o'clock this delicious spread was unpacked from a huge hamper and the children pronounced it the "best ever." Bread and butter sandwiches, egg salad, dainty custards in ramakins, sunshine cake, oranges and bananas, and a bountiful supply of lemonade.

MADAME MERRI.

Pretty Rustic Fern-Stands



DESIGN NO. 1.
DESIGN NO. 2.
DESIGN NO. 3.
DESIGN NO. 4.

For the decoration of a dinner-table, or for placing on small occasional tables, the little rustic fern-stands, of which we give a number of sketches, will be found both useful and ornamental. They are easily made, and can be constructed in a great variety of designs, and decorated in many ways; and it is well within the power of any nimble fingers to make them.

The first sketch illustrates a stand made of thin twigs of wood in the shape of a five-barred wooden gate, and mounted on a square piece of wood at the base. On the left-hand side is a fern contained in a little brown jug, and this is decorated round the neck with bows of China silk ribbon. Fastened together with thin sharp nails, and left in quite a rough state, this little stand will look very well, or it can be made very bright by entirely covering it with gold paint.

The second sketch illustrates a stand in the form of a tripod, made of slender sticks of wood, bound together where they cross. The pot containing the fern is supported by the upper portion of the stand, and the sticks are decorated with the leaves of a creeper, or vine leaves, twisted round and round them.

The third sketch is of a stand made very much on the same principle, but in this case the pot containing the fern is suspended with fine wire or string in the center of the stand. A bunch of ribbons fasten the sticks together at the top, and pins with colored heads are inserted at the ends of the sticks to finish them off. Narrow ribbon can be twisted round and round the sticks to entirely cover them, or they may be decorated in the same manner as the stand previously described.

The fourth stand is for enclosing a fern contained in an ordinary flower-pot and saucer. It is made of short sticks of wood in their rough state, and fastened together with thin nails. The space between the stand and the pot should be filled with moss.

SUBTERRANEAN RIVERS.

Yucatan's Only Streams Flow Beneath Coral Rock.

There are no streams in Yucatan which flow above the ground, but the whole peninsula is one vast table of coral rock and beneath it are immense sheets of fresh water, with regular though ill defined tides and currents. Along the coasts these subterranean waters are quite near the surface, but in the interior, where the calcareous layer is of great thickness, the waters are low down. At intervals they break into caverns formed by earthquakes by pressure of their own force or by the infiltration of surface water into the natural grottoes of the coral rock and wherever the water can be reached, whether through artificial pits or by the operations of nature, the place is called a cenote. There are a great many of them scattered all over Yucatan, and those near Merida are utilized as public bathhouses, affording most refreshing resorts.

Centuries ago the Indians marked the courses of the subterranean rivers by heaps of stones and always built their cities close by the water caves, as their ruins show, and it is interesting to note to this day all the civilized centers of Yucatan have arisen around these natural reservoirs. There are many forms of cenotes. When the water flows at a slight depth and the calcareous layer has been only partially eaten away there follows an irregular sinking, which forms a cave, opening from side to side, but when the crust is thicker and the underground stream has a regular course the soil is generally corroded in a circular space and the vault thus formed, lacking support, falls in, making an immense open well. Often the crust is so deep that the soft parts only crumble down, leaving a small aperture toward the top, fashioning a real grotto, with stalactites and stalagmites galore. Again, it happens that the crust is exceedingly thick, when a colossal subterranean passage, like a tunnel, is formed. In short, all the variations which an undisturbed stream may produce in a friable soil by the silent work of ages may be here witnessed. The cenote of which I write is a natural cavern nearly fifty feet deep, broken down at one side, thus forming a gigantic arch. Within it appears every form of stalagmite and stalactite, and its roof is perforated with holes, in which are thousands of birds' and hornets' nests. At the bottom of it, reached by a flight of stone steps from the charming garden above, is an extensive sheet of clear, fresh water, containing a multitude of tiny fish (Pescado cenote) similar to those found in the Mammoth cave of Kentucky, only these are not eyeless. The overhanging roots of trees fringe its broken arch, affording shelter to innumerable lizards and iguanas, which dart along the ledges like embodied sunbeams, while above them countless swallows circle in masses so dense that the whirring of their wings produces a deafening noise, echoed from below in hollow reverberations.

The Italian Baby.

No infant receives a warmer welcome to the world or is more happily born than the Italian baby. No infant is the object of more caresses or is more fondly admired. Indeed, no matter how poor the mother and father may be, no matter how large the family, they have very merry times when another son or daughter comes to them. The neighbors are invited in, a feast is prepared, a gallon or two of cheap wine is procured, and the merriment sometimes lasts several days. The Italian considers there are only three great events in the life of man—namely, his birth, marriage and death. These three events never pass without a gorgeous and elaborate celebration. In this simple way they strive to carry out the tender life lesson: "When you were born you wept while those around you smiled. So live that when you die you alone may smile and those around you weep." And so they laugh and drink wine and sing, for they believe it will have an effect upon the life of the quivering form soon to take its place among them.—London Standard.

Machinery of Memory.

The machinery of memory was thus interestingly described by an authority on the brain: "The act of remembering something," he said, "involves a distinct change in the brain substance. The thing to be remembered is recorded by a little nerve cell. The first time the cell does its work an impression is made upon it. But that impression is apt to wear off unless the action of the cell is repeated, and the oftener this is the case the more fixed becomes the impression, or 'cell memory,' as it is called. Suppose that the work of this particular cell is to enable you to recognize a certain smell. If the impression is made but once, the cell may fail to retain it, but if it is repeated several times a lasting impression will be made, and you will recognize the particular odor when you meet with it again."

Southern Wit.

In the early days of the civil war, says Mrs. D. G. Wright in "A Southern Girl In '61," many northern senators were especially violent in their denunciations of the seceding states, occasionally much to the amusement of their listeners.

On one occasion a western senator ended a speech by declaring that were certain threatened events to occur he would "leave this country and join some other nation. Even the Comanches he would prefer to this government in such a case."

Senator Wigfall of Texas rose in answer and stated in a tone of grave remonstrance that he trusted the senator would consider well before he took such a step, "for the Comanches had already suffered too much from contact with the whites."

A QUEER POKER GAME

IT WAS PLAYED BY TWO STOCKMEN IN A DENVER HOTEL.

The Turn That Came When the Fortunes of Both Men Were Piled on the Table—A Side Bet and a Card That Was Not Shown to the Board.

The old St. James hotel in Denver was one of the landmarks of the city for over a quarter of a century, and many famous sporting men were among its guests. Numerous stories are told of the "stiff" poker games that used to be played there in the late eighties and early nineties of the last century.

A game was played one night between two stockmen, a banker and a mining man. The story goes that the mining man and the banker played until they were "all in," leaving the two stockmen to battle it out. It came up to the "consolation" jack pot, and those who had lingered to see the finish were not disappointed when they expected something spectacular to take place. The stakes were running high, the ante being $500, with no betting limit. One of the stockmen opened for $2,500 and was promptly raised before the draw. Then there followed a series of raises and counter raises until the pot contained $11,000 before cards were drawn.

"Gi' me that one," blandly announced the man who had "seen" the last raise. The dealer slipped one card across the table, laid the deck down, relighted his neglected cigar and said unconcernedly, "I'll play these."

Then the betting commenced in earnest. The player had opened, and he led off with $2,500 as a "feeler." The dealer raised a like amount, and the other fellow followed suit. It was plain that one or the other of the men was going to lose his fortune. Checks were written, torn up and made out for larger amounts, and finally mortgage papers on real estate and cattle were passed into the pot. Finally one man said to the other:

"Say, Henry, I'm going to stay with you until everything I've got, right down to the clothes on my back, is represented on the table. Now, I'm in doubt as to some of my property holdings, so I'll make you a proposition. Give me until tonight (it was then 4 a. m.) to find out just where I stand and we'll play the hand out. Meantime let us seal up my hand in one envelope, yours in another and the deadwood in still another. We'll leave the three envelopes in the office safe, to be delivered to both of us together."

The other player agreed, and envelopes and sealing wax were sent for. The hands and remaining cards in the deck were duly sealed and deposited as per arrangement.

Meantime friends of the two players endeavored to get the men together on some sort of compromise proposition, knowing full well that neither could afford to bank his entire fortune on a poker hand, leaving his family destitute, but both men were obdurate and would listen to no proposition to split the pot. An interested and expectant group gathered in the lobby about 8 o'clock in the evening, among them being the man who had opened the pot. They talked together in a friendly manner, speculating upon what would happen when the man who went to look up his assets returned. While they were talking he walked in.

"Well, Henry, I'm ready to resume our little argument," he announced in a matter of fact tone. Then the crowd repaired to the room where the game had been played. The man announced that he had $33,000 to "play back." Securities and certified checks representing this amount were piled on the table. Then, and not until then, did either of the men show signs of nervousness. The opener had drawn a check for $33,000 and started to tear it out of the book when the other man said in a slow, deliberate voice:

"Looks a little strong for either of us, doesn't it, Henry?"

"Well," rejoined the other man, toying with the check, "what would you consider a fair proposition at this stage of the game?"

"It's not gambling, I know," said the other, "but if you want to split the pot and"—

"She's split," calmly announced the man who had opened for $2,500. The currency, gold, checks, mortgage papers and securities were equally divided. Not a word was spoken. Silently the man who opened took up the envelopes, tore them open and laid the two hands on the table, faces downward.

"Bet you a cigar I had you beat," he bantered.

"You're called," said the other, turning over four cards, jacks and sixes. The opener also turned over four cards. They were jacks and sixes.

"I'll bet you," said the dealer, "a thousand dollars that I've still got you beat."

The other man peeped at a corner of his buried card, toyed a moment with a stack of currency and shoved $1,000 to the center. Then, without waiting for the man he had called to show his hole card, he turned up a four spot. The dealer looked at it, smiled, touched the bell and put his hand in the deck. He never told what the other card was.—Denver Times.

OUR SERIAL.

FRIDAY THE 13TH

A Novel by

THOMAS W. LAWSON

Author of "Frenzied Finance."

Chapter 1.

"Friday, the 13th; I thought as much. If Bob has started, there will be hell, but I will see what I can do."

The sound of my voice as I dropped the receiver seemed to part the mists of five years and usher me into the world of Then as though it had never passed on.

I had been sitting in my office, letting the tape slide through my fingers while its every yard spelled "panic" in a constantly rising voice, when they told me that Brownley on the floor of the exchange wanted me at the 'phone, and "quick." Brownley was our junior partner and floor man. He talked with a rush. Stock exchange floor men in panics never let their speech hobble.

"Mr. Randolph, it's Sizzling Over Here and Getting Hotter Every Second."

"Mr. Randolph, it's sizzling over here, and it's getting hotter every second. It's Bob—that is evident to all. If he keeps up this pace for 20 minutes longer, the sulphur will overflow 'the street' and get into the banks and into the country, and no man can tell how much territory will be burned over by to-morrow. The boys have begged me to ask you to throw yourself into the breach and stay him. They agree you are the only hope now."

"Are you sure, Fred, that this is Bob's work?" I asked. "Have you seen him?"

"Yes, I have just come from his office, and glad I was to get out. He's on the war-path, Mr. Randolph—uglier than I ever saw him. The last time he broke loose was child's play to his mood to-day. Mother sent me word this morning that she saw last night the spell was coming. He had been up to see her and sisters, and mother thought from his tone he was about to disappear again. When she told me of his mood, and I remembered the day, I was afraid he might seek his vent here. Also I heard of his being about town till long after midnight. The minute I opened his office door he flew at me like a panther. I told him I had only dropped in on my rounds for an order, as they were running off right smart, and I didn't know but he might like to pick up some bargains. 'Bargains!' he roared, 'don't you know the day? Don't you know it is Friday, the 13th? Go back to that hell-pit and sell, sell.' 'Sell what and how much?' I asked. 'Anything, everything. Give the thieves every share they will take, and when they won't take any more, ram as much again down their crops until they spit up all they have been buying for the last three months!' Going out I met Jim Holliday and Frank Swan rushing in. They are evidently executing Bob's orders, and have been pouring Anti-People's nut for an hour. They will be on the floor again in a few minutes, so I thought it safer to call you before I started to sell. Mr. Randolph, they cannot take much more of anything in here, and if I begin to throw stocks over, it will bring the gavel inside of ten minutes, and that will be to announce a dozen failures. It's yet 20 minutes to one, and God only knows what will happen before three. It's up to you, Mr. Randolph, to do something, and unless I am on a bad slant, you haven't many minutes to lose."

It was then I dropped the receiver with "I thought as much!" As I had been fingering the tape, watching five and ten millions crumbling from price values every few minutes, I was sure this was the work of Bob Brownley. No one else in Wall street had the power, the nerve, and the devilish cruelty to rip things as they had been ripped during the last 20 minutes. The night before I had passed Bob in the theater lobby. I gave him close scrutiny and saw the look of which I of all men best knew the meaning. The big brown eyes were set on space; the outer corners of the handsome mouth were drawn hard and tense as though weighted. As I had my wife with me it was impossible to follow him, but when I got home I called up his house and his clubs, intending to ask him to run up and smoke a cigar with me, but could locate him nowhere. I tried again in the morning without success, but when just before noon the tape began to jump and flash and snarl, I remembered Bob's ugly mood, and all it portended.

Fred Brownley was Bob's youngest brother, 12 years his junior. He had been with Randolph & Randolph from the day he left college, and for over a year had been our most trusted stock exchange man. Bob Brownley, when himself, was as fond of his "baby brother," as he called him, as his beautiful southern mother was of both; but when the devil had possession of Bob—and his option during the past five years had been exercised many a time—mother and brother had to take their place with all the rest of the world, for then Bob knew no kindred, no friends. All the wide world was to him during those periods a jungle peopled with savage animals and reptiles to hunt and fight and tear and kill.

It is hardly necessary for me to explain who Randolph & Randolph are. For more than 60 years the name has spoken for itself in every part of the world where dollar-making machines are installed. No railroad is financed, no great "industrial" projected, without by force of habit, hat-in-handing a by-your-leave of Randolph & Randolph, and every nation when entering the market for loans, knows that the favor of the foremost American bankers is something which must be reckoned with. I pride myself that at 42, at the end of ten years I have had the helm of Randolph & Randolph, I have done nothing to mar the great name my father and uncle created, but something to add to its sterling reputation for honest dealing, fearless, old-fashioned methods, and all-round integrity. Bradstreet's and other mercantile agencies say in reporting Randolph & Randolph: "Worth fifty millions and upward, credit unlimited." I can take but small praise for this, for the report was about the same the day I left college and came to the office to "learn the business." But, as the survivor of my great father and uncle, I can say, my Maker as my witness, that Randolph & Randolph have never loaned a dollar of their millions at over legal rates, six per cent. per annum; have never added to their hoard by any but fair, square business methods; and that blight of blights, frenzied finance, has yet to find a lodging place beneath the old black-and-gold sign that father and uncle nailed up with their own hands over the entrance.

Nineteen years ago I was graduated from Harvard. My classmate and chum, Bob Brownley, of Richmond, Va., was graduated with me. He was class poet, I, yard marshal. We had been four years together at St. Paul's previous to entering Harvard. No girl and lover were fonder than we of each other.

My people had money and to spare, and with it a hard-headed, northern horse sense. The Brownleys were poor as church mice, but they had the brilliant, virile blood of the old southern oligarchy and the romantic, "salaam-to-no-one" Dixie-land pride of before-the-war days, when southern prodigality and hospitality were found wherever women were fair and man's mirrors in the bottom of their julep glasses.

Bob's father, one of the big, white pillars of southern aristocracy, had gone through congress and the senate of his country to the tune of "Spend and Not Spare," which left his widow and three younger daughters and a small son dependent upon Bob, his eldest.

Many a warm summer afternoon, as Bob and I paddled down the Charles, and often on a cold, crispy night as we sat in my shooting-box on the Cape Cod shore, had we matched up for our future. I was to have the inside run of the great banking business of Randolph & Randolph, and Bob was eventually to represent my father's firm on the floor of the stock exchange. "I'd die in an office," Bob used to say, "and the floor of the stock exchange is just the chimney-place to roast my hoe-cake in." So when our college days were over my able old father stood us up against the wall in his office, and tried us by his tests, and proud we both were when dad said: "Jim, you and Bob have chosen well. You, Jim, are just the chap to step into my shoes, and Bob is cut to a thirty-second and sixty-fourth for the floor." Proud we were, not so much because of what my father's decision meant for our future, for we knew we should get into the business all right, but because our judgment was indorsed by one we both thought as near infallible as man could be in anything pertaining to business affairs.

Bob was then 22 and I a year older—I one of your raw-boned New England lads, not much for prettiness, but willing to weigh in race-day with any of them for steadiness and staying qualities; Bob as handsome as they made them, six feet tall in his gym sandals straight as an arrow, with the form of an Indian, and one of those clean, brave, all-for-heart-nothing-for-policy, smiling faces to which men yield willing friendliness, and women, idolatry. Bob's eyes were as big and round and purple-brown as an English bulldog's, unfathomable, at once mild and stern, with a childish come-and-go perplexity; his nose as straight as though chiseled by a master for a Greek medallion, with thin curved lips to correspond, and a high, broad forehead, whose whiteness was set off by a luxuriance of hair that seemed jet-black, but was of the same rare purple-brown as his eyes. But it was the poise of Bob's head that gave his good looks their crown. Whoever has seen a bunch of two-year-old colts in a long-grass Kentucky paddock, when the darky boy lets loose his shrill whistle at "taking-up time," is sure to remember one that threw up its head and kept it poised to make sure it had caught the call. Grace, strngth and unharnessed wayward leadership are there personified. Some such suggestion was ever in the carriage of Bob's shapely head and vigorous figure, and dull indeed would be the man or woman who failed to recognize the man's rare distinction and masterfulness.

Indeed, as I said a bit back, Bob Brownley was by all odds one of the handsomest men I have ever seen, but besides that, he was a sterling, manly, unaffected fellow, as true as steel, as brave as a lion and the best comrade friend ever had.

Perhaps it was because his father's death had saddled Bob's youth with the heavy responsibilities of husbanding and directing his family's slim finances that he took to business as a swallow to the air. We entered the office of Randolph & Randolph on the same day, and on its anniversary, a year later, my father summoned us into his office for a sort of tally-up talk. Neither of us quite knew what was coming, and we thrilled with pleasure when he said:

"Jim, you and Bob have fairly outdone my expectations. I have had my eye on both of you and I want you to know that the kind of industry and business intelligence you have shown here would have won you recognition in any banking house on 'the street.' I want you both in the firm—Jim to learn his way round so he can step into my shoes; you, Bob, to take one of the firm's seats on the stock exchange."

Bob's face went red and then pale with happiness as he reached for my father's hand.

"I'm very grateful to you, sir, far more so than words can say, but I want to talk this proposition of yours over with Jim here first. He knows me better than anyone else in the world, and I've some ideas I'd like to thrash out with him."

"Speak up here, Bob," said my father.

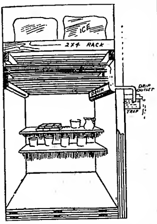
A Chance for a Bargain.

An Irishman who had begun to practice photography went into a shop to purchase a small bottle in which to mix some of his solutions. Seeing one he wanted, he asked the chemist how much it would be. "Well," said the chemist, "it will be twopence as it is, but if you want anything in it, I won't charge you for the bottle." "Then," said Pat, "put a cork in it."

DAIRY REFRIGERATOR.

Plan of Construction Which Will Insure Good Results.

In building an ice box for storing butter and milk the first requirement is proper insulation. If a room is to be fitted up for this purpose make the flooring of ordinary inch lumber with 2x2 inch strips nailed across 18 inches apart, and on them lay two thicknesses of best odorless building paper and on these strips nail the flooring; turn the floor over, so naked strips will be uppermost (the strips are three inches shorter all around than the flooring); now put on two more thicknesses of paper, and lay flooring flush with strips; cut another set of strips three inches shorter than the floor. Lay on these two more thicknesses of paper and put on a last course of flooring.



Section of the Ice Box.

There are now two perfect dead air spaces, which is a better non-conductor than any filling, and will always be sweet. Inside the room, sides are put on the same as bottom, except at the corners, where, as a matter of precaution, an extra thickness of paper is placed. In height of building leave enough room overhead for ice chamber (two feet, six inches is about right).

Now comes the principal feature of the room, namely, the ice racks. Four inches below, where the 2 ft. 6 inch line is from ceiling to cooler, nail securely a 2 in. x 4 in. scantling on long way of cooler, both sides alike; on these rest 2 in. x 4 in. pieces two inches apart. These are the floor of ice chamber.

The ice pans, or drip catchers, are made of 2 in. x 6 in. pine of good quality, thus: Gouge out one side, like a trough, full width of 2 in. x 6 in., and 1½ inches deep in the middle, turn 2 in. x 6 in. over and take off corners, and plane, so the 2 in. x 6 in. will be a gradual fall from center to edge. These troughs run same way as ice rack. Before placing them, have tinner make a strong zinc or galvanized trough two inches wide, one side strengthened by wire turned in edge, other side straight; at one end have an outlet pipe soldered on, long enough to go though cooler and project an inch or more; if desired, an air trap is put on end. This trough runs lengthwise of room below ice rack, one end nailed two or three inches lower than other to secure quick drainage. On opposite side of room from gutter, secure a 2 in x 4 in. to lay first course on drip boards, convex side up, and three inches apart; these drip boards rest just over drain. Directly under the three inch space, and two or three inches lower down, place concave 2 in. x 6 in., one end resting on drain, and other end a little higher. The drip boards are not fastened, but can be taken down and washed readily. The rack for ice is not fastened, but can be removed at any time. Make doors on same plan as side and bottom. This room, built as above, will hold the same degree of temperature at all times and is very inexpensive.

GOOD DAIRY POINTS.

In buying cows don't take the seller's pick.

It is not yet warm enough to leave the cows out of doors.

Beware of the hired man that is continually quarreling with the cows.

Remember that a cow is not a race horse and should not be a plaything for a trained dog.

Don't wait until the creamery turns out a batch of bad butter before beginning to haul the milk or cream to the factory every day.

Have patience with the calf. Don't expect him to know how to drink when he is only a day old. You certainly knew less at this age.

Fill Up the Gullies.

We reclaimed a field that had gullies in it big enough to hide a house, by filling with cedar brush, then hauling rocks, stumps and small logs and throwing on top of the brush, writes a correspondent of Farm and Home. Other gullies that were just starting were stopped by setting in slabs crosswise and staking to position. A rock cliff was fenced off and set to cherry tree sprouts which are growing nicely. A sink-hole was edged with plum sprouts which are more useful than the usual sassafras.

DAIRY IMPROVEMENT.

The Cream Should Be Cooled and Aired Immediately After Separating.

Great improvement could be made in the quality of cream if producers were more skilled in the process of cream separation. In nine cases out of ten improvement could be made with very little, if any, extra work or expenditure. The simple fact that cooling and airing cream immediately after separation and maintaining it at a low temperature will preserve its quality does not seem to be generally understood among cream producers.

The lack of cleanliness through all the operations is another great drawback to quality, and this is one of the hardest things to correct, but by careful grading and rewarding for good quality much of the trouble could be overcome.

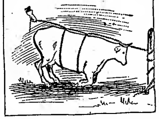
The washing of dairy utensils is one of the features most neglected by the average cream producer. There is a strong temptation on the part of the user to wash his machine out once a day, or even less often. Milk pails, cans and strainers are not, as a rule, properly washed and aired. The cow stables are often dirty and unsanitary, and through the entire operation of production there is a lack of cleanliness. There should be much more care taken in keeping the utensils clean and sweet. Washing powders could be used to good advantage and their use should be encouraged. In nine cases out of ten there is not enough cleansing matter used. Some agent should be employed in the process of washing that will aid the removing of grease, and at the same time will sweeten and cleanse the utensils. For this purpose nothing is better than sal soda or concentrated lye, and enough of either should be used to give the water a slippery feeling. It may be needless to say that all utensils should have a previous washing in nearly cold water to remove all traces of milk or cream, then a bath in the alkaline water for sweetening and purifying, and lastly an immersion in boiling water. After these processes, do not wipe dry, but hang or set where the air can circulate freely; cover with a loose meshed cloth to exclude flies and dust and we have as nearly sanitary care of dairy vessels and utensils as possible. In this connection it may be well to suggest the using of brushes instead of cloths in washing where it is impossible to reach all crevices with the latter.

Another item which would tend to better sanitation, says Coleman's Rural World, would be better rooms or buildings for doing work. The location of the hand separator in about three cases out of four is in the kitchen. While this may be necessary, it is not desirable, and certainly it does not improve the quality of the cream. The separator should be located in a place where odors and contaminating influences do not exist. A little dairy house can be cheaply made and fitted to accommodate all the utensils and work necessary in the production of cream. This may be equipped according to the size of the dairy, and would tend in a marked degree to remove some of the disagreeable features of dairying, at least to the women who must be housekeepers as well as helpers in their husband's work, for the kitchen would then be much more easily kept clean.

HOW TO THROW A COW.

It Can Be Easily Done by Method Suggested Below.

An Oklahoma farmer recommends the method shown in the drawing, which he considers self-explanatory. After the rope is brought around twice as shown, just "pull."



Bringing the Animal down.

Bad Flavors in Cream.

Most of the bad flavors of cream are those acquired by absorption, taken up from dirt and decaying vegetables kept near the cream. There is no reason why as good or better butter cannot be manufactured by the individual dairyman on the farm as in the creamery. The small hand separator, if properly cared for, will greatly facilitate the work.

Using the Skim Milk.

When a dairyman asks what is the most profitable way to dispose of his skim milk, we would say it can be used for food for man and beast. Calves, pigs and poultry all thrive on it.

Feeding the Dairy Cow.

The common practice of feeding twice a day, once in the morning and one late in the afternoon, with an armful of roughage to pick over at midday, appears a reasonable one.

Main Part of Herd.

The young bull is the main part of the herd. He should be fed proportionally as well as the cow giving milk—the food should not be fattening, but strengthening.

The Skim Milk.

The skim milk is really the most nourishing portion of the milk. It contains a large per cent. of protein and most of the sugar of milk.

UNCLE PETER'S FOURTH

BY GEORGE V. HOBART.

UNCLE PETER passed the Fourth of July at his old home in Ohio. I must show you a letter he wrote me a few days after that noisy event:

"Dear John: We had a nice, quiet time on the Fourth, with the exception of my ankle, which was somewhat dislocated because my foot stepped on an infant bombshell, which same exploded for my benefit.

"I like the idea of the Fourth with the exception of the noise.

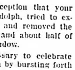
"I believe that if our forefathers had suspected that their great-grandchildren would make such an infernal racket on the Fourth of July they would have waited for a snowstorm on the 16th of January before signing their John Hancocks, because then it would be too cold to explode firecrackers under your neighbor's eyebrows when he least expects it.

"We had a nice, quiet time at home on the Fourth, John, with the exception that little Oscar Maddy, who lives next door, presented me with a roman candle which joined me between the third button on my waist-coat and the solar plexus.

"I acknowledged the receipt by falling off the front step and barking my shoulder.

"You should always remember, John, that the Fourth is the day when your patriotic voice should climb out of your thorax and make the welkin ring, but it isn't really necessary to get up a row between a stick of dynamite and a keg of giant powder to prove that you love the cause of liberty.

"You will find that some of our best citizens—men who love liberty with an everlasting love—are hiding in the cellar with both hands over their ears from July 3d to July 5th.



"We had a nice, quiet time at home on the Fourth, John, with the exception that your second cousin, Randolph, tried to explode a toy cannon and removed the apex of his thumb and about half of the dining-room window.

"It may be necessary to celebrate the birth of freedom by bursting forth into noise, but my idea, John, is that Old Glory would like it much better if we were more subdued and kept our children on the earth instead of letting them go up in the air in small fragments.

"We had a very quiet time at home, John, on the Fourth, with the exception of your distant relative, Uncle Joseph Carberry. Uncle Joe annexed about six mint juleps and then went to sleep on the front porch with five packs of firecrackers in his coat pocket.

"Full of the spirit of liberty, your interesting cousin, Randolph, set fire to your uncle's pocket, and when last seen your Uncle Joe was rushing over hill and dale in the general direction of Hartford, Conn., with the firecrackers cheering him on.

"Liberty, John, is the only real thing in this world for a nation, but just why the glorious cause of freedom should be slapped in the face with an imitation of the bombardment of Port Arthur is something which I must have misconstrued.

"We had a very quiet time here at home on the Fourth, John, with the exception that another interesting cousin of yours, my young namesake, Peter Grant, tied a giant firecracker to the cat's tail, and the cat went to the kitchen to have her explosion.

"It took two hours and seven neighbors to get your good old Aunt Maggie out of the refrigerator, which was the place selected for her by the catastrophe.

"The stove lost all the supper it contained; little Peter Grant lost two eyebrows and his Buster Brown hair; the cat lost seven of its lives, and the glorious cause of freedom got a send-off that could be heard 19 miles.

"We all missed you, John, but maybe it is better you were not at home on the Fourth, because the doctor is occupying your room so that he can be near the wounded—otherwise, we are all well.

"I think, John, that when freedom was first invented by George Washington the idea was to make it something quiet and modest which he could keep about the house and which he could look at once in a while without getting nervous prostration.

"But George forgot to leave full instructions, and nowadays when the birthday of freedom rolls around the impulsive American public wakes up at daylight, shoves up the window and begins to hurl torpedoes at the house next door, because a noise in the air is worth two noises on the quiet.

"We had a very quiet Fourth at the exception of your second cousin, Hector, who patriotically attached himself to a hot-air balloon, and when last seen was hovering over Erie, Pa., and making signs for his parents not to wait supper for him.

"Most of our neighbors for miles in every direction have sons and daughters missing, but what could they expect when a child will try to put a pound of powder in four inches of gaspipe and then light the result with a match?

"The Fourth is a great idea, but I think this is carrying it too far, as the little boy said when he went over the top of the house on the handle of a sky-rocket.

"We had a very quiet time at home on the Fourth, John, with the exception of our parlor, which took fire when your enthusiastic cousin, Randolph, tried to make some Japanese lanterns by setting fire to the lace curtains.

"The firemen put out the fire and most of our furniture.

"Your cousin was also much put out when I spanked him.

"We hope to recover from the excitement before the next Fourth, but your aunt hopes that somebody will soon invent a new style of noise which will not be so full of concussion. Yours with love, UNCLE PETER."

CANNON CRACKERS

Let him go. It is a part of a boy's education.

It does seem to the small boy that he should have one day to spend unhampered by rules and regulations.

What does your boy care if you did only have one bunch of firecrackers for the entire Fourth when you were a boy? He knows that the world was slow and sleepy then anyway.

One reason why this country has a population of nearly 80,000,000 is that so many glorious Fourths have been rainy.

A Chinaman invented the firecracker, but it was some other fool who made the first toy pistol.

If there had been cannon crackers when George Washington was a little boy, this country might never have had a father.

As usual, we start in the day after determined to have a sane Fourth next time, and henceforth to use no other.

ALL FOR HOME, SWEET HOME.

Sporting Gossip.

The truly American sport of trap shooting gains greatly in popularity with each successive year, and 1907 promises to be a record breaker. Many golf clubs are adding shooting grounds, while gun clubs increase and multiply in every section of the country. The regular season lasts from early spring until the hunting season, but the enthusiasts keep it up the year round. Live bird trap shooting still has some adherents, but the general tendency is towards the "clay pigeon." The forerunner of the "clay pigeon" was the glass ball, filled with sand or feathers, to show when broken; but shooting them was too easy, and neither in shape nor flight did they resemble birds. The targets cost about five dollars per 1,000, and as 30,000,000 are thrown annually, it would look as if trap shooting had come to stay. As to the number of shells used, only a rough estimate can be made. There are from 80,000,000 to 1,000,000,000 shot shells fired each year in the United States; but the majority is, of course, for game. A recent gun club equipment is the "tower trap," the first of which, in this country, was erected at Pinehurst, N. C., where the sport is exceedingly popular. These towns have long been used in Europe, the idea being to produce conditions somewhat similar to those experienced by the sportsman when shooting rocketing pheasants. The tower is 50 feet high, and in the top are two expert traps, right and left. The puller is protected by a thick plank partition, which also hides the traps from view. Five different kinds of targets may be thrown—right, left, overhead, unknown angles and doubles. In these events, with the exception of the "overhead" birds, the shooter faces the tower at the usual "rise" distance. In the overhead shooting he stands back to the foot of the tower and directly under the traps. Tower shooting will bother the best shooters at first. Known angles to right and left are not difficult, and many have a knack for breaking overhead targets, but the unknown angles bewilder most shooters, and "doubles"—two targets shooting off in opposite directions at the same time—call for skill and quickness such as few possess. They are by no means impossible, and some remarkable records have been made with them. The sport is no more expensive than golf or kindred games. Anyway the "game is worth the candle."

Jesse Harper has accepted the position of director of athletics for another year at Alma college at Alma, Mich. This news was received with great delight by the student body. Coach Harper has turned out the best teams this year that Alma has ever had in its history. Harper is strong in all branches of athletics. He graduated last year from the University of Chicago. He was a player on both the football and baseball teams, being captain of the baseball team. Harper is a believer in clean athletics. No unfair play has been allowed this year on any of the teams. A man must be a gentleman in athletic work, as well as in class work, he believes.

Jimmy Cockman, Newark's third baseman, puts up a claim that major league managers make a big mistake by not scouring Canadian territory when in quest of players. Cockman says that Canada is full of good material, especially near Guelph, Ontario, where he resides. According to statistics furnished by Cockman there are but eight Canucks playing professionally in the United States, including himsel, all of whom have made good. From Guelph come Cockman, Greene, one of Jack Dunn's new pitching recruits, and Congalton, Cleveland's heavy-hitting outfielder.

From other parts of Canada come O'Hara, Baltimore's fleet-footed left fielder; Archer, catcher for the Detroit Americans, and Nig Clarke, Cleveland's star backstop. Crystal, the former Providence twirler, who is now pitching winning ball for New Orleans, in the Southern league, hails from British Columbia, where he is interested in a salmon fishing enterprise. Harvey Williams, who was brought out by Ed Barrow, the Toronto manager, last season, and who was farmed out to Albany this spring, is a resident of Toronto.

SYMPATHY FOR THE FISH.

Upton Sinclair's Amazing Parable on Charity of the Rich.

Upton Sinclair, in an address before a body of Chicago Socialists, said of charity:

"The average charity, the charity of the rich, seems rather futile to me. The rich oppress the poor enormously, then they help them slightly. It is like the young lady angler.

"'Why,' said a man to this young lady, 'do you always carry a bottle of liniment with you on your fishing excursions?'

She sighed.

"'I am sorry,' she said plaintively, for the poor little fish. And so, when I take one off the hook, I always rub its cut mouth with some liniment.'"

BLACK, ITCHING SPOTS ON FACE.

Physician Called It Eczema in Worst Form—Patient Despaired of Cure—Cuticura Remedies Cured Her.

"About four years ago I was afflicted with black splotches all over my face and a few covering my body, which produced a severe itching irritation, and which caused me a great deal of suffering, to such an extent that I was forced to call in two of the leading physicians of ——. After a thorough examination of the dreaded complaint they announced it to be skin eczema in the worst form. Their treatment did me no good. Finally I became despondent and decided to discontinue their services. My husband purchased a single set of the Cuticura Remedies, which entirely stopped the breaking out. I continued the use of the Cuticura Remedies for six months, and after that every splotch was entirely gone. I have not felt a symptom of the eczema since, which was three years ago. Mrs. Lizzie E. WORKING WOMEN, WHAT THEY SHOULD KNOW

MRS. SADIE ABBOTT MRS. PREE McKITRICK

Women for the most part spend their lives at home, and it is these women who are willing and ambitious that their homes shall be kept neat and pretty, their children well dressed and tidy, who do their own cooking, sweeping, dusting and often washing, ironing and sewing for the entire family, who call for our sympathy.

Truly the work of such a woman is "never done" and is it any wonder that she breaks down at the end of a few years, the back begins to ache, there is a displacement, inflammation or ulceration of the abdominal organs, a female weakness is brought on, and the struggle of that wife and mother to continue her duties is pitiful.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, is the exact medicine a woman needs whose strength is overtaxed. It keeps the feminine organs in a strong and healthy condition. In preparing for childbirth and recuperating therefrom it is most efficient. It carries a woman safely through the change of life and in making her strong and well assists her to be a good wife and mother.

Mrs. Sadie Abbott, of Jeannette, Pa., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham—

"I suffered severely with pain every month and also a pain in my left side. My doctor prescribed for me but did me no good; a friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I wrote you in regard to my condition. I followed your advice and am a perfectly well woman. The pains have all disappeared and I cannot recommend your medicine too highly."

Mrs. Pree McKitrick, of La Farge, Wis., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:

"For six years I suffered from female weakness. I was so irregular that I would go from three weeks to six months, so I thought I would give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial.

"Now I am once more well and can do my work without a pain. Any one who wishes, can write to me and I will answer all letters gladly."

Women should remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound holds the record for the greatest number of actual cures of female ills. Every suffering woman in the United States is asked to accept the following invitation. It is free, will bring you health and may save your life.

Mrs. Pinkham's Invitation to Women.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised. Out of her vast volume of experience in treating female ills Mrs. Pinkham probably has the very knowledge that will help your case. Her advice is free and always helpful.

PINK LEMONADE.

The Story of Its Introduction to the Circus Public.

"Old Peter Conklin, the clown," said a circus official, "was the first to give pink lemonade to the world.

"It dates back to 1857, when Conklin was travelling in the south with Jere Mable's big show. Conklin had a dispute with Mable and jumped the show down in Texas. I've had the story right from his own lips. He bought a couple of mules and an old covered wagon, some tubs, tartaric acid, a lemon, a bushel or two of peanuts and started in the refreshment business. He followed the circus with his wagon, and every time the tents were pitched he would mount a box and harangue the crowd with:

"Here is your ice cold lemonade,
Made in the shade.
Stick your finger in the glass;
It'll freeze fast.

"The lemonade sold splendidly, and he couldn't wait on the people fast enough. One day he was surrounded by a mob scrambling for 'the juice,' when his water supply ran out. There were no wells or springs at hand. He rushed into the big tent, but there was ne'er a drop of water to be had. In his excitement he invaded the dressing tent. Fannie Jamieson, the bareback rider, was wringing out a pair of pink tights, the aniline dye coloring the water a very pretty shade. Conklin didn't stop to ask any questions. He grabbed up the tub and ran. Into the tub he threw some acid and the property lemon and called out:

"'Come quickly. Buy some fine strawberry lemonade.'

"His sales were doubled that day, and since then no well regulated circus is without pink lemonade. However, we do not make it the same way now, and sometimes strawberries are used as well as lemons."—Exchange.

BRUNSWICK STEW.

A Gastronomic Triumph With a National Reputation.

This celebrated stew originated in Brunswick county, Va., from which it takes its name—a county most famous in antebellum days for its perfect cuisine and gastronomical predilections. The originator was either Mr. Haskins or Mr. Stith, each claiming during a long life the distinction of having made the first stew and dying without a proper adjustment of the controversy. While made everywhere in the habitable globe, it is seldom made properly. It was introduced in Paris by Judge John T. Mason of Virginia. Only in Brunswick county is this stew so appetizing, so piquant in the seasoning to be found in all its perfection. To this remark of the writer made to a gentleman in the far south he replies, "The egotism of a Virginian suggests perfection in all things there, and the slow pace of the state ample time to arrive at it." The recipe is as follows: One of three kinds of meat is used—lamb, chicken or squirrel. If chicken, it is first parboiled, cut up as if to fry, the outer skin removed, then put on in hot water—a plenty to cover it—a large onion cut fine, a large slice of middling meat cut fine, black and red pepper in abundance and salt. After cooking until the bones can be extracted, and hot water added if not enough, corn cut off the cob and tomatoes chopped fine are added, with half a pound of butter, more pepper and salt. Before serving add stale light breadcrumbs. Never add Irish potatoes or butter beans or any vegetable save corn and tomatoes. Serve in a tureen. It should be the consistency of thick soup and very highly seasoned. It is considered one of the finest of stews and has a national reputation.—Richmond Times.

"Americanisms."

"Fired out," commonly supposed to be an "Americanism," has been traced home to Shakespeare. In one of his sonnets he says:

Yet this shall I ne'er know, but live in doubt
Till my bad angel fire my good one out.

"Say," as an exclamation to attract attention to the beginning of a remark, is common enough and not very elegant. At least so thought a schoolteacher who resolved to break his pupils of the habit of using it. A bright one quoted, however, this from "The Star Spangled Banner:"

Oh, say, can you see?

If the American people sing "say!" in the national hymn, say, why not say "Say?"

As to Bow Legs.

A bow legged man usually possesses more than ordinary strength. Why? Because his legs in supporting great weight can bend in one direction only, whereas the man with straight legs is inclined to be wabbly. Such being the case, why should not a knock kneed man be stronger than a bow legged one? His knees, being braced against each other, ought to be more steadfast than legs bending outward. Yet we all know that the knock kneed man generally goes into consumption and is at all times weaker than his bow legged brother.—New York Press.

Optimistic Sure.

Newberry—Is Sanford of an optimistic temperament? Baldwin—I should say he is. I have known him to go into a restaurant without a cent in his pocket, order a dozen oysters and feel satisfied that he could pay his bill with a pearl.—Life.

Just Playing Possum.

"So you are going to retire from politics?"

"Yes," said the municipal boss, "I'm going to retire. But I'm not going to sleep so soundly that I can't be awakened."

Men ought not to investigate things from words, but words from things.—Myson.

PINEAPPLES.

The Juice of This Fruit Is a Great Aid to Digestion.

The word enzyme does not appear to have any connection with pineapple, yet it is the name of the chemical that gives to the luscious fruit the remarkably digestible property which it possesses. The prevailing notion that pineapple juice is excellent for the digestion is supported by medical testimony. Eat a slice of the fruit after dinner, say the doctors, and you will not suffer from dyspepsia.

If you want to see what pineapple can accomplish in the way of digestion, you can easily test it on a piece of raw steak. The action of pineapple juice on meat is to transform it into jelly and then dissolve it when in the human stomach.

Place a slice of the fruit on the raw meat as it lies on a plate, and the upper surface of the steak where the fruit touches it will soon become gelatinous. Enzyme, the active principle of the juice, can be obtained by throwing salt into the juice, thus producing a precipitate.

A good sized pineapple contains two pints of juice, a fact that gives an idea of what a slice of the fruit will do for digestion. If cooked, the pineapple loses its virtue in this respect. It may be asked whether the consumption of the somewhat woody fruit itself is beneficial or not, for that can scarcely be easily digestible.

Without doubt it is the juice which does the good, not the flesh of the pineapple, but the property of the juice is so effective that the eating of the fruit itself can do no harm and may even be beneficial, inasmuch as it takes some of the strength of the juice to dissolve it and so prevents the stomach suffering from the too violent effects of the juice.

Fighting the Current.

Papua has swift streams well stocked with fish. An explorer tells of Papuan fresh water mullet which sometimes weigh as much as fifteen pounds. "These fish are wonderfully provided by nature with an appliance which helps them to combat the extraordinary currents. At one moment you will see them being swept down resistlessly, but suddenly they shoot off into the quieter water and attach themselves to the rocks by a strong sucker near the mouth. There they hang just outside the current, their tails moving gently with it, and when they have recovered their strength they make another dash through the swifter waters."

Observance of the Sabbath.

There was the minister of Tweedsmuir who on a certain Sabbath found a salmon stranded in shallow water and who, being unable conscientiously to take it out on such a day, built a hedge of stones around it and, returning on the morrow, claimed his prize. There was the old farmer who could not go to the kirk because he had neglected to shave on the Saturday night, and he would not profane the day by the use of any edged tool.—Macmillan's Magazine.

A True Fish Story.

Here is a fish story told by a British nobleman: An Irishman had caught a big pike. Noting a lump in its stomach, he cut it open. "As I cut it open there was a mighty rush and a flapping of wings, and away flew a wild duck, and when I looked inside there was a nest, with four eggs, and she had been after sitting on that nest."

There are many diversities of vice, but it is one never failing effect of it to live displeased and discontented.—Seneca.

THE GOLDFINCH.

Changes in Plumage That Are Puzzling to the Novice.

Most every one in America is acquainted with the goldfinch, but many people know the bird by the name of lettuce bird on account of its bright yellow color. Goldfinch is a very appropriate name, as the bright yellow of the male when in breeding plumage is like burnished gold. The female goldfinch is more modestly dressed than her mate. The changes in plumage of the male are very interesting and to the novice somewhat puzzling. Until the student becomes acquainted with the bird he may wonder why he sees no males during the winter. The truth is at this season the flocks of supposed female goldfinches are really of both sexes, the male bird having assumed in the previous fall, usually by the end of October, a plumage closely resembling that of the female and young bird of the year. The male retains this inconspicuous dress until late in February, when one can notice a gradual change taking place in some of the birds. This renewal of feathers is actively continued through March and April, and by the first of May our resplendent bird is with us again. The song period with the male goldfinch continues as long as he wears his gold and black livery, for it commences as early as the middle of March and ends late in August. Goldfinches are very cleanly in their habits and bathe frequently. Their nests are exquisite pieces of bird architecture, the inside being lined with the softest plant down. The mother bird is the builder, her handsome consort during the nest building time devoting most of his efforts to singing to cheer his industrious mate.—Philadelphia Press.

THE SOLAR SYSTEM.

Some Facts Which Give an Idea of Its Immensity.

In all the heavens, with the exception of passing meteors or meteorites, not one body occupies a position closer to earth than the moon, which is some 240,000 miles away—very far, of course, side by side with any earthly distances, but a mere fraction side by side with other astronomical distances. Next to the moon our nearest occasional neighbor is Venus, and then Mars. Both Venus and Mars, however, are often farther away from us than the sun, which remains always at somewhere about the same distance, roughly at from 90,000,000 to 93,000,000 miles.

This dividing space between sun and earth is of great importance in thinking about the stars, and it should be clearly impressed upon the mind. Next to the sun in point of nearness come the more distant planets—Jupiter, which is about five times as far from the sun as our earth is; Saturn, nearly twice as far as Jupiter; Uranus, nearly twice as far as Saturn, and Neptune, nearly three times as far as Saturn. All these planets belong to our sun, all are members of his family, all are part of the solar system. The size of the solar system as a whole, consisting thus of the sun and his planets, including our earth, may be fairly well grasped by any one taking the trouble to master two simple facts. They are these, that our earth is roughly about 92,000,000 miles away from the sun and that Neptune, the outermost planet of the solar system, is nearly thirty times as far distant from the sun as our earth is.—Chambers' Journal.

AN ODD BIRD.

The Kiwi of New Zealand Has Some Remarkable Peculiarities.

That queer bird, the kiwi, is a native of New Zealand. Its remarkable peculiarities are, first, the apparent absence of wings, as the plumage so covers the small, rudimentary, sticklike appendage of a wing that none whatever is apparent. The situation of the nostrils at the bill's extremity is a second peculiar feature. While hunting for earthworms it probes the soft ground, making a continual sniffing sound. Thus the scent is evidently of great help in finding food and the reason for the position of the nostrils quite apparent.

A third peculiarity is the very disproportionate size of the egg in comparison to the bird, it being a little less than one-fourth the bird's own weight. One kiwi's egg found weighed fourteen and one-half ounces, while the bird weighed just under four pounds (sixty-four ounces) and was about the size of an ordinary hen.

The plumage of the kiwi is a dull brown streaked with light gray, and the body resembles a miniature hay shock, rather badly hacked off at the rear part, as nature has not provided the kiwi with such decoration as a tail. The absence of wings is compensated for by its swiftness of foot, and the large, clumsy looking legs, which are sometimes used as weapons, are placed far back on the oddly shaped body.—St. Nicholas.

That Was All.

A young girl who is always trying some new thing was present once when the doctor set a neighbor's broken arm. She was sure that she knew exactly how it was done and rather anxious to put her new knowledge into practice. Some time later a hen out in the chicken yard broke its leg. The girl directly announced that she meant to set it "and make it as good as new." Accordingly it was put into a plaster cast and left for the proper length of time to knit. When the day came to take off the cast the girl ran out to the henhouse in great eagerness to see the result. Presently there was a scream that brought every member of the family to her side. The chicken was jumping miserably over the ground sidewise instead of directly forward. You know a hen's leg has a crook. Well, she had crooked it the wrong way, that was all.

Aliens In Old London.

Here is a curious report of the aliens in London in the year 1567: "There being a great increase of foreigners in the city, her majesty ordered the lord mayor to take the name, quality and profession of all strangers residing within the city of London." The list was headed by the item, "Scots, 40." Other nations were represented by "French, 428; Spaniards and Portuguese, 45; Italians, 140; Dutch, 2,030; Burgundians, 44; Danes, 2; Liegeois, 1."

Shark's Tail For Luck.

Attached to the extreme end of the bowsprit of a sailing vessel there may sometimes be seen a piece of some material that looks remarkably like leather. This seeming piece of leather is really a shark's tail. It is placed there because the sailors think that it augurs good luck, believing that pleasant voyages will be their lot while it remains there. Instead of the bowsprit the tail is at times nailed to the top of one of the masts.—London King.

"But, good gracious, man, if you are perfectly willing for me to marry your daughter I cannot see any object to be attained by our eloping."

"Can't you? How will it be if I offer you half of what I save on the wedding?"—Houston Post.

MERGER OF PAPERS

Gazette and Courier Consolidated Under the Name of the Gazette.

As stated in an announcement on the editorial page, THE GAZETTE and THE COURIER were consolidated last Friday, and hereafter the paper will be known as the RED LAKE FALLS GAZETTE. The subscription list and good will of THE GAZETTE was purchased by the proprietor of THE COURIER, and it seemed advisable to discontinue the latter paper, rather than use the hypenated title of COURIER-GAZETTE. The amalgamation will probably be satisfactory to the patrons of both papers, since it means a better newspaper and less expense to all concerned. Minnesota towns are quite generally getting away from the burden of a multiplicity of local newspapers, and in every instance the plan has met with cordial approval.

THE GAZETTE and THE COURIER have made a large share of the newspaper history of Red Lake Falls. The former was established September 21, 1883, by O. M. Holmes. In 1889 it was bought by Phil A. Kaufer, who conducted it very successfully until 1903, when it was sold to L. A. Dautremont. Another change occurred in May, 1906, when F. R. Creglow, the retiring publisher, bought it.

THE COURIER made its initial bow to the public on October 13, 1898, Edward F. West being its sponsor. Seven weeks later it was sold to Jeffers & Boughton, who conducted it until September, 1901, when it was purchased by John E. King. Both papers have had their ups and downs, their sunshine and shadow, but in the main they have been fairly representative of the community.

In recounting briefly the history of the two papers whose fortunes are now joined in a common destiny, it is not out of place to mention that the first newspaper in the city was the Red Lake Falls Era, edited by Alva Dewey, a cousin of Admiral George Dewey, then as little known to fame as his editorial relative. THE GAZETTE office is in possession of the first copy of the Era that was run from the press. It is dated June 29, 1882, but a marginal note informs us that it was actually printed at 6:20 p. m. of July 1, 1882, by Ernest Buse, J. H. Sanders and Adam Zeh. This paper is a relic and will be preserved in THE GAZETTE safe for the edification of posterity.

CAN'T BEAT MINNESOTA

Prof. Yaeger Says Western Coast Has Disadvantages.

C. S. Yaeger, of Fosston, who is conducting the summer school in Red Lake Falls has returned recently from a trip through Montana, Idaho, Washington and British Columbia where he made a careful and intelligent study of conditions, and has reached the conclusion that Minnesota is the best place after all. He tells a Crookston Times reporter that the reports of the Western country sent to this state are highly colored; that persons who intend to change their place of residence with a view of going West should first go out on a tour of personal investigation.

The Western country, although it has its advantages, is not the land of milk and honey as it is pictured to be by real estate manipulators, who are exercising every effort to stimulate immigration. It is a fact that lumber, which abounds in unlimited quantities, is equal in price to that sold in this part of the country: that fruit which is grown there on a most extensive scale, is just as expensive as it is here.

The price of all commodities and labor are unusually high, so that a man's income must be large in order to make both ends meet. By practice of only the strictest economy are the possibilities of making money in the West as great as in Minnesota,

To give an idea of the activity of the real estate men, it is a fact that no sooner has a man arrived in the West and registered at a hotel than he is spied out and deluged with literature containing glowing misrepresentations of the Western country.

MAIL EARLY.

Weighing Will Be Done For Next Six Months.

The periodical weighing of mail began Monday, July 1st, all over the United States and will continue six months.

The weighing is to determine the weights of the different classes of mail and the sub-classes with a view to an adjustment of postage rates. There are nine different classes and sub-classes of mail and the sorting and weighing separately will be no small chore. During the weighing period it will be well for people to deposit their out-going mail early, as it will not be practicable for postmasters to undertake to sort, classify and weigh up anything arriving the last minute, and any mail arriving too late to be conveniently classified, weighed and counted up will have to wait in the office until next mail.

SUES FOR DAMAGES

Scrap Out At Plummer Presents Some New Developments.

The following dispatch from Plummer to the Minneapolis Journal of Thursday last indicates that the scrap between Editor Latta, of Plummer, and several business men of that place, which was started last winter, has developed into something more than talk, and will be interesting reading to the people of this section of the state:

Plummer, Minn., July 3.—Papers were served here yesterday in the action for damages in the sum of $5,000 wherein Charles W. Latta, publisher of the Plummer Pioneer and postmaster, seeks to recover from Julius Pleth, H. J. Enderle and A. Alrick, real estate dealer, cashier of the First State Bank, and a merchant, respectively.

The action is the outcome of a local difficulty between business men at Plummer and the editor-postmaster and the complaint charges that the defendants entered into a conspiracy to ruin the plaintiff by boycotting his paper and the postoffice and that they induced others to join with them in such a boycott.

The boycott of the paper was started on March 1 and on April 1 was extended to the post office, the defendants and others mailing their letters on the trains and at other postoffices. The Plummer postoffice is a fourth-class office and the postmaster's compensation is governed by the number of stamps cancelled. When the office was boycotted, the postmaster complained to the department with the result that late in May the mail cars on the trains were closed, which resulted in the boycotters being forced to mail their letters at the postoffice.

The case will be tried at the fall term of District court in this city. Mr. Latta has engaged Attorney L. F. Gossman of Crookston to conduct his case, while Attorneys Boughton and Grady, of this city, will appear for the defendants.

HISTORY OF THE SUIT.

Plummer Business Men Discuss Latta's Action.

The action in district court by Editor Charles Latta for $5,000 damages against Julius Pleth, Henry J. Enderle and A. Alrick, prominent residents of Plummer, is attracting coinderable attention, and in an interview Mr. Pleth; in enumerating the causes leading up to the suit, says:

"In the fall of 1905, after Mr. Latta returned from the Keeley cure, I took him out here to Plummer, bought a lot and put up a building and purchased the printing plant, at a total cost of $1,875 and Latta never invested a single dollar. On January 28, 1907, I sold the plant to Mr. Latta's father-in law, J. O. Sargent of Crookston, for $1,250, thereby giving him a discount of $625, as I was tired of carrying the load any longer. At various times since the fall of 1905 I have helped Latta and loaned him sums of money from $10 to $25 whenever he needed it. As Latta was hard up and in need of money to support his family I was instrumental in getting him appointed postmaster, a fact which he himself admits, and also loaned him money with which to buy his postoffice fixtures."

In his complaint Mr. Latta alleges that on February 24, 1907, a secret meeting was held, and that the defendants and others were present. There was no secrecy about this meeting as Mr. Latta was invited to attend and was present during the entire meeting.

For three or four months prior to this meeting, Mr. Latta conducted a warfare against William Lauritzen buttermaker at the Plummer creamery, because of a personal grudge. The citizens of Plummer realizing the importance of retaining Mr. Lauritzen, and feeling that the newspaper attacks were unjustifiable, called the meeting for the purpose of talking over matters with Mr. Latta, and asked him to discontinue the unwarranted attacks. All of the business men expressed the opinion that Mr. Latta's attitude was injuring the town and told him unless the abuse was stopped they would withdraw their patronage.

In the next issue of the Pioneer he again published an article derogatory to Mr. Lauritzen and the creamery, and the business men made good their threat to withdraw their business from the paper. This was done by each merchant individually, and not because of any bargain or pledge with Messrs. Pleth, Enderle and Alrick nor because of anything the defendants said or did.

Since then the Pioneer has waged incessant warfare on the business men of Plummer, attacking the city council, and fighting every local interest which a newspaper is expected to support and defend. This course naturally enraged the Plummer people and after about two months from the time of the first meeting, they stopped mailing their letters at Latta's postoffice. This action was taken by each one individually and not because of an alleged "conspiracy" on the part of Pleth, Enderle and Alrick. A prominent business man of Plummer who has no direct interest in the matter declares:

"Latta hasn't a single friend in Plummer, which goes to show that he is at fault, and while the suit was brought against three of the business men, it is in reality directed against Pleth. This shows the basest ingratitude, as Pleth has always tried to help Latta in every way.

"We are not worrying as to the outcome. A man has a right to discontinue his patronage to any concern when he pleases and likewise has a right to mail his letters in St. Petersburg or Hong Kong if he likes. For that reason it is not likely that the jury will give Latta a verdict."

Whisky Or Milk?

Luverne Herald: A distressing accident occured at the Omaha station Tuesday evening, In the station awaiting the arrival of the west bound passenger was a man busily engaged "minding" a baby about a year old. Becoming tired of carrying the little one and not being able to find a seat, he squatted on his heels. After wavering an instant in that position he toppled over backwards but managed to keep the child from striking the platform. He quickly resumed his squatting posture but when he had attained it those near by noticed a dark stream run from under his coat at the back. Instantly the platform was strained and it became apparent that he had broken his—bottle.

Wasn't His Lead.

At the close of a long and tiresome sermon a preacher in a neighboring town said: "We will bow our heads in prayer. Deacon White will lead." There was no response. "Deacon White," this time a little louder "will you lead?" Evidently the deacon was sleeping. The preacher made a third appeal and raised his voice to a pitch that succeeded in arousing the drowsy man' "Deacon White, will you lead?". The deacon in bewilderment blurted out: "Oh, go to thunder, it ain't my lead—I just dealt."

Two cases were heard. The one P. K. Olson vs. Louis Seiff, arising out of the ownership of the Plummer saloon property, was argued and the judge took it under advisement, to render a decision later.

The case of George A. Judson vs. Moses Allard and Joseph Allard, a suit on promissory notes, was heard, and judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff in the amount claimed.

The case of Lillie C. Olson vs. Johnson and Norby was continued 'till the fall term.

Court was adjourned late in the afternoon until next Monday, July 15.

Suit Over Plants.

Plummer Pioneer: On Friday of last week a somewhat unusual case was tried before Judge Gullingsrud in justice court here. It was a repelvin action brought by M. O. Sortedahl, of Red Lake Falls to get possession of a couple of fine plants which had been adorning the Plummer creamery and which the buttermaker, Wm. Lauritzen considered his property.

It seems that the plants were originally purchased and paid for by Sortedahl from Mrs. Thelander, at the time of her auction sale in the spring of 1906.. At that time the plants were left in possession of Mrs. Thelander and she sold them again to Mr. Lauritzen. About three weeks ago Mr. Sortedahl came to Plummer and called at the creamery to see about getting his plants. They were refused and in the course of the argument it seems that he was ordered out of the creamery by the buttermaker. Suit was then brought to recover possession of the property and as stated the case was tried Friday last. The court took the case under advisement and handed down his decision on Saturday, dismissing the action. Mr. Sortedahl has taken an appeal to the district court.

Dr. Spofford makes his next regular visit to Red Lake Falls Aug. 7. At Grand View hotel. Remember the date if your eyes trouble you.

THE HAYWOOD TRIAL.

Judge Wood Rules Against Haywood.

Boise, June 29. — A ruling made yesterday by Judge Wood while Edward Boyce, for years the leader of the Western Federation of Miners and now a wealthy mine owner of the Coeur d'Alenes, was testifying in behalf of William D. Haywood, may materially limit the showing of the defense as to the existence of the counter conspiracy against Haywood and his associates which it alleges.

Claims Same Latitude as State.

James H. Hawley, for the state, objected to a general question as to the policy and practice of mine owners throughout the West in blacklisting union miners, and in the argument that followed Clarence Darrow, for the defense, claimed the same latitude in proving counter-conspiracy that the state enjoyed in showing a conspiracy.

Mr. Hawley contended that the state had directly shown the existence of a conspiracy by Harry Orchard, and by so doing had laid the foundation for and made the connection of all the evidence subsequently offered on the subject. He said the defense was trying to show a counter-conspiracy by proving various isolated instances and certain general conditions, none of which was connected with the case and for none of which a proper foundation had been laid.

Court Sides With State.

In ruling the court accepted in part the contention of the prosecution, and limited the proof of the defense along these lines to events in Colorado and the Coeur d'Alenes connected with the case as now established.

Ed Boyce was the principal witness of the day, and his testimony was chiefly devoted to the history, purposes and work of the Western federation. He denied the existence of an "inner circle" or that there had ever been a conspiracy in the organization or an illegal act.

Still Try to Discredit Orchard's Story.

Boise, Idaho, June 30. — The attorneys for Haywood continue to center their efforts on the discrediting of Harry Orchard and the establishment of their claim that Orchard killed Frank Steunenberg in revenge for the loss of his interest in the Hercules mine. Yesterday they directly attacked the story of the Vindicator explosion with the testimony of a witness who made it appear accidental rather than criminal.

Vindicator Explosion.

Thomas Wood, a non-unionist, who entered the Vindicator mine as a timber man after the strike began, swore that the night before the explosion he placed a box containing twenty-five pounds of dynamite at the shaft of the eighth level. He saw the powder the next morning shortly after 10 o'clock, and a few minutes later Supt. McCormick and Foreman Beck came to the eighth level. They remained but a short time and left to go to the sixth level, where they were killed. Wood swore that when he reached the shaft, twenty minutes later, the powder was gone and it was a reasonable inference that McCormick and Beck took it with them.

Contradicts Orchard.

Wood testified that he had seen a revolver in Beck's pocket; that the fragments of only one revolver were found in the sixth level, and that the bodies of McCormick and Beck were blown apart, indicating that the explosion had occurred between them. Orchard said that he fixed a revolver with a wire attachment, so that when the safety bar was raised it would send a bullet in the giant powder he had placed. One witness for the state has sworn that he found a wire attached to the safety bar, but Wood, who was among the first to reach the sixth level after the explosion, said that he had carefully examined the safety bar and found nothing attached to it.

William Eoaterly and D. C. Copley both swore that they heard Orchard tell of the loss of the Hercules mine and threaten to kill Steunenberg Says Detectives Spied on Union.

Boise, Idaho, July 2.—Morris Friedman, formerly an employe of the Pinkerton detective agency at Denver, who published his adventures and many of the confidential reports that passed through his hands in an attack on the agency, was a witness Saturday in behalf of William D. Haywood. He told how the Pinkertons had sent spies into many of the important unions of the Western Federation of Miners.

By name and operating number Friedman identified a dozen detectives who succeeded in entering or getting very close to the miners' union in Colorado, and he produced voluminous copies of the reports they made to the agency for transmission to the mine owners.

Spies Are Consistent.

Friedman was confidential stenographer under Detective McPartland, and, so he testified, it was part of his duties to copy the reports of the operatives as they reached the office.

Friedman swore that in several instances the detectives sent out by the agency in behalf of the mine owners managed to get themselves elected to high office in the unions and that in a couple of instances they carried their roles to the extent of sharing all the hardships of the strikers and finally being deported from the country with them.

Tried to Beggar Federation.

Friedman said that one Pinkerton operative became chairman of the union strike relief committee at Globeville, and as such had charge of all the funds disbursed there by the local union and general federation.

Friedman said that under instructions from his superiors at the Pinkerton agency this man first tried to beggar the federation by a lavish expenditure in behalf of the strikers, and failing in this he cut the relief down to the lowest point in the hope that the members of the union might censure Haywood.

Apache by Sub-Agent.

Boise, Idaho, July 3.—Morris Friedman, the stenographer who left the employ of the Pinkerton agency at Denver to write a book in which he published certain correspondence of the agency that passed through his hands, was again yesterday the principal figure at the Steunenberg murder trial. More than half of the day was occupied in reading to the jury copies of the documents that Friedman took from the Pinkerton records. They were chiefly the daily reports of secret agents operating as spies among the union men, and showed a of the Western Federation of Mine Workers of America during the labor troubles in Colorado in 1903-04. Pinkerton men sat in the Federation convention at Denver in 1904, reporting all proceedings. None of the reports that were read to the jury contained other than general references to the collateral issues of the trial, but they were offered in substantiation of the claim of the defense that the Pinkerton agency conspired for the destruction of the Western Federation of Miners and the lives of its leaders.

State Attacks Friedman.

The prosecution attacked Friedman on the ground that he had played the Pinkertons false, had violated his pledge to them and had stolen the documents which he produced, but the witness would not admit that he had stolen the papers. He insisted that it was not stealing to take information that had been obtained by deceit. He said that if he had known this trial was coming up he would have taken many more letters and reports.

Misuse of Militia.

Another interesting witness was J. I. Wallace, an attorney of Cripple Creek, who served with the militia, first as a private and then as a lieutenant, during the strike of 1903-04. He related several instances as tending to show the misuse of the power of the militia by the mine owners; gave the criminal records of some of the gun fighters imported by the mine owners; told of the working of the card system; recited the circumstances connected with the looting of the union stores and a newspaper office, and swore that he saw K. C. Sterling, chief detective for the mine owners, fire the first shot in the Victor riot the day of the Independence station incident.

Tear Orchard's Story to Tatters.

Boise, Idaho, July 4.—Max Malich, Joe Mehelick and Billy Aikman, three of the men variously implicated in alleged misconduct at Globeville, Denver and Cripple Creek, on the work of Harry Orchard, went on the stand yesterday as witnesses for William D. Haywood and made denial of Orchard's testimony.

Malich swore that Orchard and not he, suggested the plot of dynamiting a boarding house full of non-union men at Globeville, and that Orchard originated the idea of killing William McDonald, one of Malich's business rivals.

Not "Pettibone Dope."

He said that he had been burned by some mysterious acid thrown into his house by an unknown hand, but denied that this acid was really "Pettibone dope" that had been left in his room by Steve and Annie Adams. He also denied that "Pettibone dope" had been used in burning his store and said that he was at his ranch when the fire occurred. He also swore that Orchard had told him that but for Gov. Steunenberg he would be rich and that he intended to kill Steunenberg.

Deny Orchard's Story.

Mehelich and Aikman, who followed Malich, also made circumstantial denial of all the things that Orchard swore they did with him. The cross-examination of all three witnesses showed a purpose on the part of the state further to deal with their testimony when the case in rebuttal is reached.

Eugene Engles, formerly attorney general of Colorado, avers that Orchard told of a loss of a rich share in the Hercules mine, and of his intention to kill Steunenberg. Engles told at great length how the military authorities at Cripple Creek defied the processes of the civil courts.

The facts are that Mr. Rockefeller telegraphed to Judge Landis in Chicago, notifying him that if in Judge Landis' opinion it was necessary for Mr. Rockefeller to go to Chicago he would be present on Saturday without the service of a subpoena.

"Not hearing from Judge Landis yesterday, Mr. Rockefeller sent word to the United States marshal whose district includes Pittsfield that if he had a subpoena to come and serve it."

FOURTH TAKES TOLL OF DEATH

CELEBRATION RESULTS IN THE USUAL LOSS OF LIFE AND LIMB.

Chicago, July 6.—Thirty-six persons were killed and 1,471 injured while celebrating Independence day, according to the Record-Herald, which made a canvass of the accidents in the entire United States during the last twenty-four hours.

In Chicago six persons were killed by revolvers which were supposed to be unloaded and by the deadly giant firecracker. New York furnished seven of the dead, while the rest of the fatalities are scattered over the country.

In the list of injured many were seriously hurt and a number will undoubtedly die.

Seven Killed in New York.

New York, July 5. — Independence day, ushered in with much noise, went out last night in a blaze of pyrotechnics, the most imposing that New Yorkers have witnessed.

In the background the police and hospital surgeons went grimly about their work of removing the dead and administering to the wounded.

At midnight the police figures showed the following totals:

Dead, 7; probably fatally injured, 6; hospital cases, 423, not including dispensary cases; fires, 116; arrests for carrying weapons, 423.

FRAUDULENT USE OF MAILS CHARGE

GOVERNMENT BEGINS PROSECUTION OF WISCONSIN GRAIN AND STOCK CO.

SEVEN WARRANTS SWORN OUT

St. Paul, June 30.—Lewin A. Wood, president of the St. Paul Automobile club, was arraigned at 6:30 last evening before United States Commissioner Spencer on a charge of using the mails to defraud. He entered a plea of not guilty and was released on $5,000 bail to appear for a hearing at 10 o'clock next Friday.

The arrest was made in connection with prosecutions commenced by the government against the Wisconsin Grain and Stock company. Seven warrants were issued on application of P. A. Ewart, assistant district attorney. The warrants were for the arrest of L. A. Wood, G. W. Wood, C. D. Phelps, vice president of the Wisconsin company; M. P. Quigley, cashier and treasurer of the company; C. T. Kelley, stock and grain buyer of the company; B. D. Tuttle, as local manager of the company, and H. P. Ernsberger, secretary and agent of the company in Superior, Wis.

Quigley, Tuttle and the two Woods appeared and furnished bonds. The warrants will be served on Kelley and Phelps to-day.

Inspector Ketcham Gets Busy.

The cases are the direct result of numerous complaints which, it is said, have been made to the authorities that the Wisconsin Grain and Stock company was not transacting business "according to Hoyle." The postoffice department detailed Inspector W. M. Ketcham of Chicago on the case six months ago. He rounded up sixty-five complainants, who join in asserting that the methods of the company are not as represented. The dealings of the sixty-five complainants represent transactions amounting to $342,000, and it is contended by the government that the trades were fictitious.

Conspired to Deceive.

The contention of the government is that the defendants conspired to deceive and that they used the United States mails in carrying on the deception. It is claimed that the statements sent to customers and purporting to be memoranda of actual sales of stock and grain were not genuine, and that there has been no actual sales of stock. It is claimed that the Superior board of trade, on which they deal, is in reality a subterfuge and that the trades supposed to be made there are merely a pretense.

History of Trouble.

The trouble began several years ago, when the Edwards-Wood company became very active in an effort to drive the Coe Commission company out of business and later succeeded, as it did with one or two smaller concerns. The Edwards-Wood company then had trouble with the Chicago board of trade and with the Minneapolis chamber of commerce, and lost its membership in both institutions.

The Wisconsin Grain and Stock company was then incorporated and purchased the business and good will of the Edwards-Wood company.

STEEL CAR PLANT FOR DULUTH.

Will be Companion Concern for the Trust's Big Steel Mill.

Pittsburg, June 29. — A steel car plant to be erected at Duluth, Minn., as a companion to the new steel plant of the United States Steel corporation is the next expectation.

Officials of the corporation say that unless either the Pressed Car company or the Standard Steel Car company goes into the project the steel corporation will erect and operate the plant itself.

Officials of the Standard company say that there is no possibility of them starting the construction of another plant for some time. The Pressed Steel Car company has also shied at the proposition. Having just gotten an addition to its producing capacity under way at Montreal, Canada, the directors feel that they do not care to take up another enterprise of this nature.

Because of the inability to secure any definite promise, it is learned on good authority that a company which will also be a subsidiary one of the steel corporation, will be organized in the near future to finance and build the car plant.

WOULD JAIL STATION AGENT

MOVE AT NORTHFIELD MAY CAUSE COMPLICATIONS IN RATE FIGHT.

St. Paul, June 30.—What may cause some complications in the fight in the courts over freight rates in Minnesota, but which one of the state officials yesterday called a "flash in the pan," was the arrest of L. O. Olson, station agent of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul at Northfield Thursday on a charge of violating the freight rate law passed by the last legislature.

The specific charge is that he collected the present rate instead of the rate established by the new law on a carload of coal shipped from Duluth to Northfield. Mr. Olson was arraigned before Judge Carpenter in the municipal court at Northfield, and the hearing was continued until Monday.

The situation regarding the rate law is that the legislature passed a freight rate law fixing rates to go into effect on June 1. But before June 1 stockholders of the railroads started proceedings to enjoin the railroads from putting in the rates, and the attorney general and the state railroad and warehouse commission from enforcing them. The hearing in these cases will come up before Judge Lochren in the federal court on July 8.

There was some discussion on the question whether the arrest would bring about a conflict between the federal and the state courts and lead to a determination of the question of which has jurisdiction. Whether that results will depend on what action Judge Carpenter takes in the case.

SUSPECTED OF BANK ROBBERY.

One of Men Nabbed Is Identified at Swanville.

Little Falls, June 30.—According to a report received from Swanville yesterday a good working clue has been found as to the identity of the opera bouffe bank robbers who blew the safe in the First National Bank of Swanville last fall, and then decamped without securing any booty, through the arrest of the two men supposed to be responsible for the blowing up of the bank at Windom, Minn.

Some time ago a gang of men blew up a bank at Windom and two alleged members of the gang, named White and Christie, were arrested in St. James. Their pictures were sent to William Siems, proprietor of the Swanville bank, and the man Christie has been identified as a man who seen hanging around Swanville the day before the safe was cracked there.

AGENT OBEYS INSTRUCTIONS

ADMITS HE VIOLATED THE NEW MINNESOTA FREIGHT RATE LAW.

Northfield, Minn., July 3.—Before Judge Carpenter of the municipal court here yesterday morning came the clash between the United States court and the Minnesota state court. L. O. Olson, agent for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railroad, pleaded not guilty but admitted that he had charged freight rates in excess of the rates provided in chapter 232 of the Minnesota law enacted by the late legislature, but said he was acting on instructions from his superior officer. The court reserved its decision for two days. The whole matter is at present tied up by federal court injunction, and the attorneys for the defense denied the jurisdiction of the state court in the matter. The matter was taken under advisement. The hearing on the injunction is set for July 12.

NECK IS DISLOCATED.

Man Squeezed Between Load and Crossing Beams Is Badly Hurt.

Alexandria, Minn., July 3.—Henry Schulke of Carlos, seventy years old, probably was fatally injured in a peculiar manner. He was hauling cordwood, and was seated on top of the load. He attempted to go through the underground crossing to the Great Northern yards. Schulke thought he would be able to get through, despite the height of the load, but his head was caught between the timbers and the load of cordwood and a vertebra in his neck was dislocated. He is still alive, but in a precarious condition.

VETO BY GOV. DAVIDSON.

Refuses to Sign Bill Regulating Issue of Securities.

Madison, Wis., July 3.—Because he believes it would give recognized railroad companies unrestricted powers in issuing stocks and bonds and give holders of preferred stock unfair privileges and preferences over holders of common stock, Gov. Davidson yesterday vetoed Senator Whitehead's bill regulating the issuing of stocks and bonds by corporations. The veto was sent to Chief Clerk Emerson of the senate, who will report it when that body reconvenes next Monday night.

Wisconsin Girl Is Victim of Brutal Crime.

Wausau, Wis., July 3.—Jennie Rehle, daughter of John E. Rehle, aged sixteen years, was assaulted and murdered Sunday afternoon in a strip of woods along the road near her home. She was on her way from church at Stratford when accosted. The girl's hands had been tied behind her back and her clothes were torn to shreds. A rib on the left side had been broken. There were finger marks on her throat and it was shown at an autopsy that the girl had been choked to death. Two men have been arrested on suspicion.

DISBELIEVE ROBBERY STORY.

Former Treasurer Found Guilty of Larceny.

Duluth, July 3.—James Pinkerton was found guilty of misappropriating $3,000 of funds of the town of Schroeder, of which he was formerly treasurer. The jury evidently did not believe his story that the money had been snatched from his hand as he was going from a boat to the hotel at Grand Marais, and found him guilty. He was sentenced to four and one-half years at Stillwater.

WATER RECEDES RAPIDLY.

Cut-Off at Belle Plaine Soon Will Be in Condition to Cross.

Belle Plaine, Minn., July 3.—The water in the Minnesota river at this point is going down rapidly, and the famous cut-off at this place soon will be in a condition to make it possible to cross. INSURANCE INVESTMENTS.

How One Company's Assets Are Distributed in the South and West.

In connection with its withdrawal from Texas, along with many other companies, rather than to submit to the new law which requires that 75% of the reserves on Texas policies shall be invested in securities of that state, which securities shall be deposited in the state and subjected to heavy taxation, in addition to the large tax now imposed on life insurance premiums, the Equitable Life Assurance Society has made public the distribution of its assets, at the end of the second year of the new management. The Equitable now has $10,958,000 invested in Texas, which is twice as much as the new law requires, but the management decided that to submit to the additional taxation would be an injustice to its policyholders in other states, which impose no such penalty on the thrift of their citizens.

The Equitable's report shows that more than 37% of its total reserves are now invested in the southern and western states, while only 35% of its total insurance is carried in these states. Its investments are distributed as follows: Ala., $3,099,000; Ariz., $974,000; Ark., $4,038,000; Cal., $5,142,000; Col., $6,222,000; Fla., $4,924,000; Ga., $4,048,000; Idaho, $5,197,000; Ill., $12,617,000; Ind. Ter., $443,000; Ind., $5,836,000; Iowa, $3,690,000; Kansas, $11,637,000; Ky., $2,631,000; La., $3,054,000; Md., $2,207,000; Mich., $6,009,000; Minn., $2,065,000; Miss., $767,000; Mo., $8,197,000; Mont., $1,890,000; Neb., $7,626,000; Nev., $640,000; New Mex., $1,375,000; N. C., $1,649,000; N. D., $677,000; Ohio, $11,634,000; Okla., $1,005,000; Ore., $1,158,000; S. C., $976,000; S. D., $1,305,000; Tenn., $1,909,000; Utah, $2,134,000; Va., $6,592,000; Wash., $1,202,000; W. Va., $5,523,000; Wis., $2,342,000; Wyo., $3,367,000.

NO CHANCE FOR STRIFE.

Her Fiance Had Said So Himself and of Course He Knew.

"People think that because I am a woman," said Mrs. Hetty Green, "I can be imposed on; but usually they find out their mistake."

She was talking about a lawsuit wherein she had disputed her lawyer's bill and this topic naturally led her to the topic of women's trustfulness.

"There is a case in point," said Mrs. Green, smiling grimly, "about a young and pretty school teacher. She once asked her class for an original definition of the word 'wife.'

"'A wife is a rib,' said one little girl.

"'Wives are guiding stars,' said another.

"'A comforter,' said a third.

"'An inspiration,' said a fourth.

"Altogether the definitions were rather prosy and commonplace, but finally a child of eleven said:

"'A wife is a person for a man to find fault with when things go wrong.'

"'Good!' cried the pretty teacher, laughing. 'Good! That is the best definition of all. The best, the truest.'

"But that afternoon, on the way way home from school, the little girl whose definition had so pleased, tripped demurely up to the teacher and said:

"'Are you not going to marry that tall, handsome young man I see you with nearly every night?'

"'Yes,' said the teacher.

"'Well, then, if my definition of a wife was true—'

"'Ah, but, dear, with us nothing will ever go wrong. He says so himself.'"

Turned the Tables.

In a crowd waiting for a car at Eleventh street and Grand avenue yesterday was an old negro, who was inclined to be discursive. Two high school boys believed they saw a chance to make fun of him, and made several remarks at which they themselves laughed heartily. Finally one of them said: "You're a preacher, aren't you, uncle?"

"Yes, sah," replied the negro, bringing forth the card. 'Ahm a undertaker, too. Ah don't wish you no bad luck, but Ah'd lak teh have yo' husiness."

COFFEE COMPLEXION.

Many Ladies Have Poor Complexions from Coffee.

"Coffee caused dark colored blotches on my face and body. I had been drinking it for a long while and these blotches gradually appeared, until finally they became permanent and were about as dark as coffee itself.

"I formerly had as fine a complexion as one could ask for.

"When I became convinced that coffee was the cause of my trouble, I changed and took to using Postum Food Coffee, and as I made it well, according to directions, I liked it very much, and have since that time used it in place of coffee.

"I am thankful to say I am not nervous any more, as I was when I was drinking coffee, and my complexion is now as fair and good as it was years ago. It is very plain that coffee caused the trouble."

Most bad complexions are caused by some disturbance of the stomach and coffee is the greatest disturber of digestion known. Almost any woman can have a fair complexion if she will leave off coffee and use Postum Food Coffee and nutritious, healthy food in proper quantity. Postum furnishes certain elements from the natural grains from the field that Nature uses to rebuild the nervous system and when that is in good condition, one can depend upon a good complexion as well as a good healthy body. BESIEGE HOME OF ROCKEFELLER

SUBURBAN RESIDENCE AT CLEVELAND SURROUNDED BY DEPUTIES.

LOEB PUNCTURES THE RUMOR

JAPAN WOULD NOT REGARD INCREASE OF PACIFIC FLEET AS MENACE.

Cleveland, July 4.—Forest Hill, the suburban home of John D. Rockefeller, was besieged by United States Marshal Frank M. Chandler and a corps of deputies representing the department of justice from early yesterday morning till after nightfall. Up to that hour the efforts of federal officials to serve the subpoena issued from Judge Landis' court in Chicago on Mr. Rockefeller had been unsuccessful, and Marshal Chandler and his deputies will will continue picketing the Rockefeller estate.

Access to the lodge was denied a deputy marshal at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon and Marshal Chandler at that time announced that he would ask the department of justice at Washington for further authority.

Given Freedom of Place.

Later he was admitted to the lodge and Supt. Jones of the Rockefeller estate informed him that he and his deputies could have the freedom of the place, a disclaimer being entered that the barring of the gate against the deputy marshal was meant as an affront to federal authority. Marshal Chandler would not say positively last night that he believed John D. Rockefeller is at Forest Hill, but he said he felt sure that the latter is now within the jurisdiction of the federal court of Northern Ohio.

NO OFFENSE IN NAVAL MOVE.

Transfer of Fifteen Battleships to Pacific Not Contemplated.

Washington, July 4. — "No, Japan would not regard it as an unfriendly act if the American government saw fit to increase her naval representation in her territorial waters on the Pacific coast, or even if she sent additional men of war to the Asiatic station. She would not look upon it as a menace or regard it with regret."

These were the words of Viscount Aoki, the Japanese ambassador to the United States, when his attention was called yesterday to published reports that the general board of the navy had recommended to the president that the battleships of the American fleet be sent around to the Pacific coast.

Uncle Sam Not "Skeered."

Published reports that sixteen battleships of the Atlantic fleet of the United States navy are to be transferred to the Pacific coast because of anti-American feeling in Japan were denied yesterday at Oyster Bay by William Loeb, President Roosevelt's secretary. Mr. Loeb said the report was without foundation; in fact, that such a movement has never been considered by the president and that its consideration is not contemplated.

RUIN IN PATH OF TORNADO.

Part of Texas County Destroyed—Many Injured but None Killed.

Rochester, Tex., July 4.—Early yesterday morning a tornado destroyed the greater part of this town. No deaths have been reported, but a number of persons are hurt. Farm houses in this locality have been demolished. As yet reports are meager from the outlying districts.

At Munday the tornado destroyed several buildings and one church. Business buildings were badly damaged. Several persons were hurt. A lumber yard was wrecked and lumber scattered over the country for miles.

At Wichita Falls the wind caused considerable damage.

At Olney, in Young county, a number of buildings were wrecked and the Ikleberger cotton gin destroyed.

RUSSIAN SEEKS ROOSEVELT.

Insane Man Wanders Around White House Looking for President.

Washington, July 4. — "I'm looking for the president," was the statement of Leonard A. Burd, twenty-four years of age, who was found wandering about the green room at the White House yesterday.

"What do you want with the president?" Policeman Jamison asked him.

"The president," answered the stranger, "telephoned to my home in Russia for me to come here and be made a citizen."

His conduct indicated that he was suffering from mental trouble, the policeman thought, and he sent Burd to the station.

Creel Will Visit Northwest.

Washington, July 4. — Senor Creel, the ambassador from Mexico, left here yesterday for New York, where he will remain a few days. The ambassador expects to visit the West and Northwest and will probably go to Canada.

Students Escape In Fire.

Huntsville, Ala., July 4.—The Calhoun building, home of the Condor training school, burned yesterday. Prof. J. E. Condor, principal, and several students narrowly escaped. The building cost $50,000.

Red Lake Falls Gazette
AND RED LAKE COURIER
BY JOHN E. KING
SAM S. HAISLET, LOCAL EDITOR
Printed Every Thursday at Red Lake Falls Minnesota.
OFFICIAL PAPER RED LAKE COUNTY
OFFICIAL PAPER RED LAKE FALLS CITY
$1.00 Per Year In Advance

ANNOUNCEMENT.

It will be universally conceded that a town is judged by the great outside world largely by the character of its newspapers, and it will also be generally acknowledged that one well-supported and well-conducted newspaper is better than two where the field does not offer a proper support. A large number of Minnesota towns have during the past year had proof of these assertions. At Wadena the Pioneer-Journal recently absorbed its competitor and there are few hetter newspapers in the state than the one conducted by Editor Eastman. The enlargement of its subscription list and the increaeed job and advertising patronage has enabled the publisher to hire more and hetter help, set more type and give his readers better service than heretofore given by both papers combined. The same is true of Hutchinson, where the Leader has the exclusive field, at Glencoe, at Sauk Centre—all of them larger towns than Red Lake Falls. At Adrian, where once three newspapers divided the business, the Democrat alone survives. The business men get more value for the money spent for advertising, and the community gets better service in every respect, at less cost.

This, by way of preface, will prepare the reader for the announcement that the Red Lake Falls newspapers have joined in the march of progress by consolidating. Last Friday the publisher of THE COURIER purchased the good will and subscription list of THE GAZETTE, and with kindly hands laid to their rest the mortal remains of his own paper—preferring that the name of the amalgamated papers should he THE RED LAKE FALLS GAZETTE.

Red Lake Falls gains a notable honor in this arrangement, for the consolidation gives THE GAZETTE a larger subscription list than any other paper in the Red River Valley—the large cities excepted. THE COURIER list was 1,150, and THE GAZETTE list was 1,450, and after allowing for duplication of oames, the actual net circulation of the heir to these lists is between 1,900 and 2,000—more than two-thirds being in Red Lake county. The local field could not he covered more thoroughly, and it would probably be difficult to find a hundred homes in southern Red Lake county THE GAZETTE does not reach.

THE GAZETTE hopes to do its full share in working for the welfare of its town and county, and promises at the outset to give the best service its patronage warrants. All we ask in return is that the people it serves remember that an obligation rests on them no less than on us. THE GAZETTE has no axe to grind nor any animosities to feed.

And as to THE COURIER—peace to its ashes! It has served a useful purpose and been a factor in the civic life of the community.

CREGLOW SAYS FAREWELL

This week THE GAZETTE appears under the management of John E. King, who has purchased the subscription list and good will. All outstanding subscription accounts are to be paid to Mr. King, who will also fill out all unexpired subscriptions.

Circumstances made it impossible for the writer to move here, hence the sale. THE GAZETTE has always enjoyed a good patronage, but one paper is enough for a town of this size.

We have been cordially received in Red Lake Falls, and have never met a better lot of people in any community. We regret that we must sever our business relations with them, and there will always be a warm spot io our heart for them.

I hope that the resourees of Red Lake county may be ultilized to their fullest extent, to the end that your town and county may grow and flourish like the proverbial green bay tree.

F. R. CREGLOW.

THIEF RIVER WOMEN-FIGHTERS.

It is reported that the three Thief River Falls men who drove to County Commissioner Lindquist's home June 29 to carry him bodily to the meeting which did not materialize, made a most shameful exhibition of their lack of manliness and the true spirit in which they are conducting the county seat fight, when they found that Mr. Lindquist was not at home. Only Mrs. Lindquist and the children were there and the three men proceeded to abuse her husband to her with such a profusion of bad language as would disgrace a bar room.

It is said that one of the three, a prominent banker, high in church circles at Thief River Falls, so far forgot himself as to exceed the others in profanity and bad language in addressing the lady.

It is a most regrettable circumstance. The county-seat fight has led to many bitter recriminations on both sides, but the people of Red Lake Falls, have not yet resorted to abusing women and frightening children, thank the Lord.

If it ever comes to the point when we must surrender our manhood to hold our rights or gain a point we will give up our county seat and quit the fight.

THE GAZETTE holds opinions on divers subjects and expects to express them, but it will not be a partisan paper nor a party organ. Hereafter it will be couducted entirely independent of political parties, and devote its energies to the upbuilding of Red Lake Falls and Red Lake county. We believe that before long nearly every country newspaper will take the position that dogmatic allegiance to party is inimical to the highest good of the paper and of the community it represents. To avoid misreureseotation THE GAZETTE desires to state that the proprietor is still a Democrat and the managing editor is still a Republican, and both promise to be very still so far as the policy of the paper is concerned. If necessary to let off political steam, they'll hire a hall.

LESUEUR CENTER, the sprightly county seat of wealthy LeSueur county now has but one paper, the Leader and Democrat haviog consolidated. In announcing the amalgamation the editors give reasons which apply not inaptly to the newspaper situation in Red Lake Falls. The Leader Democrat says:

> Feeling that some explanation is due our patrons we will now state that this step was taken for business reasons only. While both of the papers have enjoyed liberal patronage yet on account o the general advance of all printers supplies it has become a problem to make ends meet and to raise our prices meant additional hurdeos upon our patrons. And believing also that one healthy and vigorous paper would he of more value to the community than two struggling for existence, we decided to consolidate the two plants. In this we are not without a precedent, since a number of consolidations have recently taken place in this state.

THE Thief River News sets a splendid example before the rising generation in editorially championing and countenancing murder and rapine. When the prehistoric savage couldn't get what he desired he wanted to kill some one, and this thirst for gore now and then breaks out among his descendants. Mr. Eastman's remote ancestors must have fought at the drop of the hat, and waded knee deep in gore, or else he is attempting to prove the Darwinian theory by showing the monkey blood in his veins.

THE Milwaukee railroad agent at Northfield, arrested last week for illegally charging $2.00 per ton freight on hard coal when the rate fixed by the new law is only $1.42, was found guilty and sent to jail for an hour—and not a second off for good behavior. Anyway, the majesty of the state law was upheld, and after a while the railroads will understand that they, too, are amenable to the statutes of Minnesota.

THE American Economist, organ of the tariff beneficiaries, is afraid the farmers of Minnesota won't take kindly to Governor Johnson's presidential aspirations because of his reform news, adding that "the Minnesota farmers are standpatters." Get the chalk out of your eye, old boy. Say, did you ever hear of James T. McCleary?

OUT in a western mining town, where woman divinely fair as otherwise, is rarer than a day in June, the preacher used as his theme "God give us men!" One of the listeners remarked that the idea might be a good one and men were all right, but if it didn't make any difference to the Lord "he'd take his'n in wimmin folks."

JOHN D. is something like a possum. When tired he is willing to "come down." Davy Crockett Landis ought to have his inning of limelight for getting the oiltupus in a pocket from which even his million dollar lawyer couldn't extricate him.

ATTORNEY GENERAL YOUNG is not only putting on the "lid" but he is sitting on it. More than nine-tenths of the former wide-open towns of the state are now "dry" on Sundays.

AN exchange speaks of a "semi-fatal accident." This reminds us of Mark Twain's famous utterance that the reports of his death were "greatly exaggerated."

THE promised "sane fourth" like the millenium, is still a long way off. The complete returns of the killed and maimed makes a list longer than last year.

IT must be that John Eastman and Henry W. Lee have a private graveyard up north and business in their line is rather quiet just now.

THE New York Mail presumes that the L. L. D. conferred upon Edward Bok stands for "diluter of literature for ladies."

ATTORNEY GENERAL BONAPARTE is after the trusts, with the trusts well in hand, remarks the Windom Citizen.

TIMES are changing—even down south. The new governor of Oklahoma is a democrat and a prohibitionist.

THE Idaho Orchard is hearing some mighty bitter fruit.

The Right View.

Plummer Pioneer: The county seat removal petition is still sleeping and there is no telling just when it will be awakened into a live issue. The special meeting of the county board called to consider the new petition on Monday last was a big dissapointment to the pushers of the petition. In fact the meeting didn't meet and consequently there was no action taken. We understand that two of the commissioners and a big crowd of enthusiastic Thief River men were present but they could do nothing. It is said that the board cannot meet to consider the new petition as long as as the old one is in existence, and, while it is claimed that the old one was stolen, there is nothing to show that it has been destroyed or has passed out of existence. If this is the right way of looking at the merits of the new petition it can easily be seen that nothing can be accomplished until the old one is either proved to have been destroyed or recovered.

Hot Weather Beauty Hint.

Food needs careful study in summer. While it is very necssary to take sufficient nourishment to replace what the body loses from excessive heat it should be remembered that fatty foods are great heat producers and should be taken only in small quantities. Hot drinks should be replaced with cold beverages. A good pure malt tonic as golden grain belt beer, is recommended for table use. It aids digestion and should be in every home. Keep a case in your cellar—it is handy for evening refreshment. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

Piles get quick and certain relief from Dr. Shoop's Magic Ointment. Please note that it is made alone for Piles, and its action is positive and certain. Itching painful protruding or blind piles disappear like magic by its use. Large nickel capped jars 50 cents. Sold by all dealers.

Convalescents need a large amount of nourishment in easily digested form.

Scott's Emulsion is powerful nourishment—highly concentrated.

It makes bone, blood and muscle without putting any tax on the digestion.

"B. B." and "I LEAD" CIGARS

do not have fancy colored bands around them, but the smoker should buy a cigar for quality and not for the "trimmings."

The "B. B." cigar contains more pure tobacco than any 10c cigar on the market, and is made carefully and with a view to the comfort of the smoker. The money that is necessarily spent to sell the foreign brands of cigars is put into the quality of the "B. B." Why shouldn't they be better.........

A shocking thing happened over in one of our nearby towns. One of the popular society women announced a "a white elephant party." Every guest was to bring something she could not find use for and yet was too good to throw away. The party would have been a success but for an unlooked for development, which broke it up. Eleven of nineteen women brought their husbands.

Harvesters' rates will not be made by the railroads this fall, as a result of the new interstate passenger tariffs based on the 2-cent rate in Minnesota and the 2 1-2 cent rate in North Dakota, effective on July 1st. Railroad officials say that the new rate makes the fare to the principal shipping points in North Dakota less than the customary $6 harvesters' rate, and as no reduction will be made from regular fare, harvester tickets would not be called for if issued.

The pretty farm home of Mr. and Mrs. Matt Steele, two miles, west of Red Lake Falls was the scene of a delightful gathering of their many old friends and neighbors from Lyon county on July 4, and the affair was one of great enjoyment to all present. There were sixty-four present and the day was spent in feasting, games and reminiscences of days gone by, the late hours of the evening coming all too quickly to suit those who had been so royally entertained. The feast lasted from one o'clock until five, the tables being especially heav-y laden with good things that ladies know so well to provide. Ice cream and cake in abundance furnished a fitting climax to the immense spread and all did ample justice to every part of the menu. Those present beside Mr. Steele's family of four were Mr. and Mrs. George Orr, and five children, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Walker and two children, Miss Addie Orr, and Mrs. Barney and children, who are visiting from Mershall, Mr. and Mrs. Hanly and son, Carl Hundermark and sister, Mrs. Miller and five children, Mr. and Mrs. Kellogg and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Fuller and three children, Mr. and Mrs. George Herr, and five children and Mr. Herr's father, Mr. and Mrs. J. Leland and Ralph Healy, Ernest Buse and Clem Brunelle will leave Saturday to spend ten days or two weeks on what should be a delightful outing. They will ship Lee's launch to Thief River Falls by rail and from there will go up the Red Lake river to Red Lake, down the Blackduck river to Blackduck, spending a few days there, and returning by the same route. All camping and other necessary supplies will be taken along and the boys expect to have the time of their lives.

Strawberry pickers were numerous throughout southern Red Lake county last Sunday and every available rig in the city was used to convey jolly parties out to the prairies. The day was ideal for the work, and every party out enjoyed themselves to the limit. The strawberry crop is immense this year and the prairies are literally covered with this tempting fruit. Full pails and baskets told the story of excellent success and preserved wild strawberries will be a common dish here next winter.

The "lid" is on in Red Lake Falls and from now on the saloons will be closed all day on Sunday in conformity with the state law, This order of things is being put into practice all over the state and it has not yet been said that it is working any hardships on the public. The saloon men themselves are well pleased with the new ruling, and not one objects to observing this law in the least. According to the orders of the mayor the curtains and blinds must all be up and open and this rule was strictly adhered to here last Sunday.

A jolly party of Red Lake Falls people left Tuesday for Maple Lake to enjoy an outing of a week or so at that popular resort. They have rented a cottage on the lake shore and they intend to get all the fun possible out of their stay. The party was composed of Mesdemes Frank E. Hunt, H. N. Johnson, J. E, Argue, and the Misses Mayme Erickson, Pauline Neiland, Mollie Allard, Etta Garceau, Agnes Garceeu and Etta Hennemuth, Several ladies from other points will join them at the lake and they expect to spend a very pleasant fortnight.

A patched up ball team went down to Crookston Monday afternoon and played the Crookston team a game of ball—or at least that is what they called it. About half of the locals couldn't go on account of the short notice given and their places were filled with picked up players. Narveson, of McIntosh and Stephens of Crookston, also played with Red Lake Falls. The game was a walkaway for Crookston, the score being 10 to 3 in their favor, but nevertheless there was some good playing done on both sides and the crowd enjoyed the contest. Our boys drove down in the afternoon and back the same night.

County commissioners Lindquist, Aubol and Demann drove out to the eastern part of the country Tuesday to confer with the town officers of. the several towns out there regarding bridge work. The last legislature appropriated considerable money for bridge use in Red Lake county provided the towns mentioned in the appropriation would appropriate a like amount. The object of the commissioners' visit was to determine whether or not the town boards intended giving the necessary money, and found the sentiment strongly in favor of such a move. All the new bridges will probably be built within the next year.

The fourth in Red Lake Falls passed off without any particular excitement. No celebration was held here and those of our people who remained home spent the day pleasantly. Several picnic parties were held along the river and a general good time was had. In the morning quite a crowd went to Thief River Falls and St. Hilaire to attend the celebrations, and a juvenile ball team and several people helped out the Wylie crowd. At St. Hilaire, F. A. Grady, of this city. was the orator of the day and his speech was well spoken of. The rest of the celebration was very enjoyable to the people who went from here.

Rev. G. Boltinger, of Burt, Iowa, occupied the pulpit at the Presbyterian church here Sunday and is spending this week here looking over the field. He will conduct regular services here again Sunday. Rev. Boltinger has lived in eastern Iowa for a number of years and of late desired to try the north country, and it is very probable that he will accept the call to the pastorate of the church here. Monday he visited with Rev. Barackman at Thief River Falls, to familiarize himself with church conditions hereabouts. He is enjoying the week here immensely and thinks it is one of the grandest places he ever visited.

Word has been received from L. P. Berthon at Missoula, stating that he is working like a Trojan and is particularly well pleased with the outlook. "Old Pauly" tells how he will like the west as a home and expects to prosper, but he can't begin to get over the memory of the pleasant send-off given him by the business men at the banquet at the Grand View a few weeks ago, and states that he has since received personal letters from Governor Johnson, W. J. Bryan, President Roosevelt and President Falliers, of France, conveying to him again their extreme regrets at not being able to be present on that most auspicous occasion. Red Lake Falls people have a warm spot in their hearts for friend Paul and will always gladly receive news of his good health and prosperity.

Small grain, flax and corn look better at the present time than they have at this season for several years, and with the co-operation of the elements to the end desired Red Lake county farmers will reap a bountiful reward when the threshing machine story is told. A drive through the country at this time is a revelation, inasmuch that where one expects to find things backward on account of the late season just the opposite is true. Barley is already heading out and is of good stand and color while the wheat and oats look healthy and are well advanced. Flax is looking especially good and it is freely predicted that the flax crop this year will be a record-breaker. In fact everything that grows looks good and there is every indication that this portion of the Red River valley will redeem itself this fall.

THE SHORTEST SOLDIER.

How a Young Kansan Under the Required Height Got Into the Army.

Charles L. Dagan of Keats, Kas., a young army recruit who enlisted in Kansas City and left with a squad of recruits for Jefferson barracks, near St. Louis, is probably the shortest soldier in the United States army. His height is 5 feet 2 inches. He was accepted only on the recommendation of President Roosevelt, to whom he wrote explaining the situation after he had been rejected on account of his height at the auxiliary recruiting station at Topeka early in April.

Dagan had entertained the hope of becoming a soldier for a number of years. He is now twenty-two, and, having no one dependent upon him, he went to the recruiting station to enter the service. He passed a rigid examination save for his height, but the news that for this reason he could not become a soldier did not deter him. He had decided to become one, and promptly wrote to President Roosevelt, explaining the situation. He made an earnest appeal to the chief executive and the frank, earnest manner in which he couched his plea seemed to strike the president as that of a man who would make a good soldier.

This is probably the first instance of an acceptance of an application for enlistment in the army when a discrepancy of two inches in the required height existed. The minimum height, as stipulated by the war department, is 5 feet 4 inches.

Dagan is of almost perfect build, weighs 130 pounds and has a five-inch chest expansion. He expressed a desire to enlist in the cavalry and be sent to the Philippines. At Jefferson barracks he will be assigned to a regiment of cavalry under orders or preparing for orders for Philippine service.

ONE MAN'S EXPERIENCE IN WESTERN CANADA.

There Are Thousands of Opportunities in the Land of Opportunity.

To the Editor.
Dear Sir:

The following experience of an Illinois man who went to Western Canada six years ago is but one of the thousands of letters that could be reproduced showing how prosperity follows the settler on the fertile lands of Western Canada. This letter was written to the Chicago agent of the Government of the Dominion of Canada and is dated at Evarts, Alberta, April 8th, 1907:

"It is six years the 5th of this month since I and family landed in Red Deer, family sick and only $75 in my pocket. Bought a $12 lot, built a 12x14 shack and went to work as a carpenter. Next May sold for $400 (had added 16x18 building to shack). Purchased two lots at $70 each and built a 23x28 two story building and sold for $950. Filed on a quarter section 33 miles N. W. of Red Deer and have spent three years on it and am well pleased. Quarter all fenced and cross fenced, wire and rail, 2½ miles of fence. House 29x31 feet on stone foundation. Last year was my first attempt to raise grain, 1½ acres of fall wheat, yield grand, but was frosted August 1st, was cut August 16th and made good pig feed. Had 1½ acres fall rye that I think could not be beat. A farmer from Dakota cut it for me; he said he never saw such heavy grain anywhere. Straw was 7 feet high. I had 4 acres of 2 rowed barley on fall breaking that did not do so well, yet it ripened and gave me all the feed I need for stock and seed for this spring. I did not have grain threshed, so can't give yield, but the wheat would have gone at least 25 bu. to the acre. Have a log stable 31x35 feet, broad roof and two smaller buildings for pigs and chickens.

"I have lived in Harvey, Ills., and know something about it. I have been hungry there and though able and willing to work could get none to do. One Saturday evening found me without my supper or a cent to get it with. A friend, surmising my situation, gave me a dollar, which was thankfully accepted and later paid back. Wife and I are thankful we came here. We were living near Mt. Vernon, Ills., as perhaps you remember visiting me there and getting me headed for the Canadian Northwest, and a happy day it has proved for me. I have not grown rich, but I am prospering. I would not take $3,000 for my quarter now. The past winter has been a hard one, but I worked outside the coldest day (52 below) all day and did not suffer. We are getting a school started now that is badly needed.

"Our P. O., Evarts, is about 15 miles; there is another office 6 miles, but it is not convenient to us. Wife and I would not exchange our home here for anything Illinois has to offer.

"Yours truly,
"(Sd.) E. EMBERLEY."

SISTER ROSE.

A STORY OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

CHAPTER IX.—(Continued.)

"Perhaps we shall tide over to-night, after all—who knows?" said Lomaque, ringing his hand bell for lights. They were brought in, and with them ominously returned the police agent Magloire with a small sealed packet. It contained an arrest order and a tiny three-cornered note, looking more like a love letter or a lady's invitation to a party than anything else. Lomaque opened the note eagerly and read these lines, neatly written, and signed with Robespierre's initials—M. R.—formed elegantly in cipher:

"Arrest Trudaine and his sister to-night. On second thoughts I am not sure, if Danville comes back in time to be present, that it may not be all the better. He is unprepared for his wife's arrest. Watch him closely when it takes place, and report privately to me. I am afraid he is a vicious man; and of all things I abhor Vice."

"Any more work for me to-night?" asked Magloire, with a yawn.

"Only an arrest," replied Lomaque. "Collect our men, and when you're ready, get a coach at the door."

"We were just going to supper," grumbled Magloire to himself, as he went out. "The devil seize the Aristocrats! They're all in such a hurry to get to the guillotine that they won't even give a man time to eat his victuals in peace."

"There's no choice now," muttered Lomaque, angrily thrusting the arrest order and the three-cornered note into his pocket. "His father was the saving of me; he himself welcomed me like an equal; his sister treated me like a gentleman, as the phrase went in those days, and now—"

He stopped and wiped his forehead; then unlocked his desk, produced a bottle of brandy, and poured himself out a glass of liquor, which he drank by sips, slowly.

"I wonder whether other men get softer hearted as they grow older?" he said. "I seem to do so, at any rate. Courage! courage! what must be, must. If I risked my head to do it, I couldn't stop this arrest. Not a man in the office but would be ready to execute it, if I wasn't."

Here the rumble of carriage wheels sounded outside. "There's the coach!" exclaimed Lomaque, locking up the brandy bottle, and taking his hat. "After all, as this arrest is to be made, it's as well for them that I should make it."

Consoling himself as he best could with this reflection, Chief Police Agent Lomaque blew out the candles, and quitted the room.

CHAPTER X.

IGNORANT of the change in her husband's plans, which were to bring him back to Paris a day before the time that had been fixed for his return, Sister Rose had left her solitary home to spend the evening with her brother. They had sat talking together long after sunset, and had let the darkness steal on them insensibly, as people will who are only occupied with quiet familiar conversation. Thus it happened, by a curious coincidence, that just as Lomaque was blowing out his candles at the office, Rose was lighting the reading lamp at her brother's lodgings.

Five years of disappointment and sorrow had sadly changed her to outward view. Her face looked thinner and longer; the once delicate red and white of her complexion was gone; her figure had wasted under the influence of some weakness which already made her stoop a little when she walked. Her manner had lost its maiden shyness only to become unnaturally quiet and subdued. Of all the charms which had so fatally, yet so innocently, allured her heartless husband, but one remained—the winning gentleness of her voice. It might be touched now and then with a note of sadness, but the soft attraction of its even, natural tone still remained. In the morning of all other harmonies, this one harmony had been preserved unchanged! Her brother, though his face was care-worn, and his manner sadder than of old, looked less altered from his former self. It is the most fragile material which soonest shows the flaw. The world's idol, Beauty, holds its frailest tenure of existence in the one Temple where we most love to worship it.

"And so you think, Louis, that our perilous undertaking has really ended well by this time?" said Rose, anxiously, as she lit the lamp and placed the glass shade over it. "What a relief it is only to hear you say you think we have succeeded at last!"

"I said I hoped," replied her brother.

"Well, even hoped is a great word from you, Louis—a great word from any one in this fearful city, and in these days of Terror."

She stopped suddenly, seeing her brother raise his hand in warning. They looked at each other in silence, and listened. The sound of footsteps going slowly past the house—ceasing for a moment just beyond it—then going on again—came through the open window. There was nothing else, out of doors or in, to disturb the silence of the night—the deadly silence of Terror which, for months past, had hung over Paris. It was a significant sign of the times, that even a passing footstep sounding a little strangely at night, was subject for suspicion, both to brother and sister—so common a subject that they suspended their conversation as a matter of course, without exchanging a word of explanation, until the tramp of the strange footsteps had died away.

"Louis," continued Rose, dropping her voice to a whisper, after nothing more was audible, "when may I trust our secret to my husband."

"Not yet," rejoined Trudaine earnestly. "Not a word, not a hint of it till I give you leave. Remember, Rose, you promised silence from the first. Everything depends on your holding that promise sacred till I release you from it."

"I will hold it sacred; I will, indeed, at all hazards, under all provocations," she answered.

"That is quite enough to reassure me—and now, love, let us change the subject. Even these walls may have ears, and the closed door yonder may be no protection." He looked towards it uneasily while he spoke. "By the by, I have come round to your way of thinking, Rose, about that new servant of mine—there is something false in his face. I wish I had been as quick to detect it as you were."

Rose glanced at him affrightedly. "Has he done anything suspicious? Have you caught him watching you? Tell me the worst, Louis."

"Hush! hush! my dear, not so loud. Don't alarm yourself; he has done nothing suspicious."

"Turn him off—pray, pray, turn him off, before it is too late!"

"And be denounced by him, in revenge, the first night he goes to his Section. You forget that servants and masters are equal now. I am not supposed to keep a servant at all. I have a citizen living with me who lays me under domestic obligations, for which I make a pecuniary acknowledgment. No! no! if I do anything, I must try if I can to entrap him into giving me warning. But we have got to another unpleasant subject already—suppose I change the topic again. You will find a little book on that table there, in the corner—tell me what you think of it."

The book was a copy of Corneille's "Cid," prettily bound in blue morocco. Rose was enthusiastic in her praises. "I found it in a bookseller's shop yesterday," said her brother, "and bought it as a present for you. Corneille is not an author to compromise any one, even in these times. Don't you remember saying the other day that you felt ashamed of knowing but little of our greatest dramatist?" Rose remembered well, and smiled almost as happily as in the old times over her present. "There are some good engravings at the beginning of each act," continued Trudaine, directing her attention rather earnestly to the illustrations, and then suddenly leaving her side when he saw that she became interested in looking at them.

He went to the window—listened—then drew aside the curtain, and looked up and down the street. No living soul was in sight. "I must have been mistaken," he thought, returning hastily to his sister; "but I certainly fancied I was followed in my walk to-day by a spy."

"I wonder," said Rose, still busy over her book, "I wonder, Louis, whether my husband would let me go with you to see 'Le Cid' the next time it is acted?"

"No!" cried a voice at the door; "not if you went on your knees to ask him."

Rose turned round with a scream. There stood her husband on the threshold, scowling at her, with his hat on, and his hands thrust doggedly into his pockets. Trudaine's servant announced him, with an insolent smile, during the pause that followed the discovery. "Citizen-superintendent Danville, to visit the citoyenne, his wife," said the fellow, making a mock bow to his master.

Rose looked at her brother, then advanced a few paces towards the door. "This is a surprise," she said, faintly; "has anything happened? We—we didn't expect you." Her voice failed her, as she saw her husband advancing, pale to his very lips with suppressed anger.

"How dare you come here, after what I told you?" he asked, in quick, low tones.

She shrank at his voice almost as if he had struck her. The blood flew into her brother's face as he noticed the action, but he controlled himself, and, taking her hand, led her in silence to a chair.

"I forbid you to sit down in his house," said Danville, advancing still; "I order you to come back with me! Do you hear? I order you."

He was approaching nearer to her, when he caught Trudaine's eye fixed on him, and stopped. Rose started up, and placed herself between them.

"Oh, Charles! Charles!" she said to her husband, "be friends with Louis to-night, and be kind again to me—I have a claim to ask that much of you, though you many not think it!"

He turned away from her, and laughed contemptuously. She tried to speak again, but Trudaine touched her on the arm and gave her a warning look.

"Signals!" exclaimed Danville, "secret signals between you!"

His eye, as he glanced suspiciously at his wife, fell on Trudaine's gift book which she still held unconsciously.

"What book is that?" he asked.

"Only a play of Corneille's," answered Rose; "Louis has just made me a present of it."

At this avowal, Danville's suppressed anger burst beyond all control.

"Give it him back!" he cried, in a voice of fury. "You shall take no presents from him; the venom of the household spy soils everything he touches. Give it him back!" She hesitated. "You won't?" He tore the book from her with an oath—threw it on the floor and set his foot on it.

"Oh, Louis! Louis! for God's sake, remember!"

Trudaine was stepping forward as the book fell to the floor. At the same moment his sister threw her arms round him. He stopped, turning from fiery red to ghastly pale.

"No! no! Louis," she said, clasping him closer. "Not after five years' patience. No—no!"

He gently detached her arms.

"You are right, love. Don't be afraid; it's all over now."

Saying that, he put her from him, and in silence took up the book from the floor.

"Won't that offend you even?" said Danville, with an insolent smile. "You have a wonderful temper—any other man would have called me out."

Trudaine looked back at him steadily, and taking out his handkerchief, passed it over the soiled cover of the book.

"If I could wipe the stain of your blood off my conscience as easily as I can wipe the stain of your boot off this book," he said quietly, "you should not live another hour. Don't cry, Rose," he continued, turning again to his sister, "I will take care of your book for you until you can keep it yourself."

"You will do this! you will do that!" cried Danville, growing more and more exasperated, and letting his anger get the better even of his cunning now. "Talk less confidently of the future—you don't know what it has in store for you. Govern your tongue when you are in my presence; a day may come when you will want my help—my help, do you hear that?"

CHAPTER XI.

TRUDAINE turned his face from his sister, as if he feared to let her see it when those words were spoken.

"The man who followed me to-day was a spy—Danville's spy!" That thought flashed across his mind, but he gave it no utterance. There was an instant's pause of silence; and through it there came heavily on the still night air the rumbling of distant wheels. The sound advanced nearer and nearer—advanced, and ceased under the window.

Danville hurried to it, and looked out eagerly.

"I have not hastened my return without reason. I wouldn't have missed this arrest for anything!" thought he, peering into the night.

The stars were out, but there was no moon. He could not recognize either the coach or the persons who got out of it, and he turned again into the interior of the room. His wife had sunk into a chair—her brother was locking up in a cabinet the book which he had promised to take care of for her. The dead silence made the noise of slowly ascending footsteps on the stairs painfully audible. At last the door opened softly.

"Citizen Danville, health and fraternity!" said Lomaque, appearing in the doorway, followed by his agents. "Citizen Louis Trudaine?" he continued, beginning with the usual form.

Rose started out of her chair; but her brother's hand was on her lips before she could speak.

"My name is Louis Trudaine," he answered.

THE LEGS KICKED.

Surprise of an English Visitor Who Thought He Was Rescuing a Man.

Frank Hyatt, who has long enjoyed an income of £3,000, derived principally from his vocation as a "booking agent" for London Thespians, two weeks ago landed in the American metropolis for the purpose, as he said, of seeing what on earth Mr. J. A. Bailey could do with so many men and beasts as he had been shipping to him. New York and its ceaseless rush amazed him. Mr. Bailey's winter quarters at Bridgeport were past his belief, the swiftly moving Broadway cars, "a lot of trams pulled by a string," surprised him, says the New York World.

His idle moments "at 'ome" are spent upon the race-courses of England and there, in times past, he has met many of his friends. Recently, at an uptown Broadway hotel, as he glanced out into the street his kindly blue eyes seemed to start from their sockets. Rushing into Broadway he shouted:

"Hold on here! Don't start that car! Here, somebody, call an ambulance!" Then Mr. Hyatt plunged almost headforemost under the car and began tugging away at a man's legs that were lying across the rails beneath the center of the car. As he did so the legs began to kick vigorously. The rescuer felt himself pulled away violently, saw the brawny fist of the conductor shaking close to his nose and he heard the angry voice of the conductor saying:

"What do you mean, sir, by trying to keep that man from fixing the car? Do you think we want to block Broadway all day?"

Mr. Hyatt turned toward the hotel and was greeted by laughter from the crowd that his cries had attracted.

A LAKE OF FIRE.

But the Fire is Only Phosphorescent Water—It's in the Bahamas.

The Lake of Waterloo is a phosphorescent sheet of water a thousand feet long, near Nassau in the Bahamas. At night it is like a sheet of living fire if any wind is stirring to ruffle its surface.

If the night be calm, says the Rosary Magazine, the water lies dark and still until some object sets it in motion. Little colored boys are ready to swim out into the lake, where they seem to be clothed in garments of flame, leaving a long trail of molten splendor behind them.

The oars when rowing are as when dipped in fire, and if one holds up a handful of the water and lets it fall it looks like beads of gold, and the fish that dart here and there, startled by the visitors, leave flashes of mystic, glowing splendor behind them.

The clumsy turtles that move about look like balls of fire, and when it rains the lake is like a mass of jewels. This marvelous display of phosphorescence has never been accounted for, as the lake is of artificial formation, having been made for the breeding of turtles by a Nassau resident. The bed of the lake is cut out of solid limestone and it is filled from the sea, in which there is little of the phosphorescent quality.

DIOGENES' CASK.

The hub or cask that Diogenes lived in was a jar of the kind used for wine, as engravings on ancient monuments show. A bas relief at the Villa Albani suggests, moreover, that the jar was a cracked one, unsuited for any other use than as a movable grotto for the Greek philosopher to dwell in.

Fishhawk Gave Up Prey.

Aleck Canova brought a three-pound trout to the Record office this morning and gave a very interesting description of the manner in which it was caught.

His son, Frank, observed a big fish-hawk swoop down on the fish near Bar Creek, about a mile and a half north of town, and noted that the fish was of very respectable size. He watched the big bird until it hovered almost overhead but within close range, and he picked up a stone and with splendid accuracy hurled the missile at the hawk, striking it.

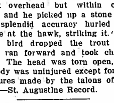
The bird dropped the trout and Frank ran forward and took charge of it. The head was torn open, but the body was uninjured except for the punctures made by the talons of the hawk.—St. Augustine Record.

His Good Fortune Fatal.

It is possible to live long in melancholy and to die swiftly from joy. So it has proved with a Paris carpenter named Fermet. He had worked for years in a chronic state of melancholy, aggravated by want of money, and all the circumstances seemed to point to a long continuance of this condition of things, when suddenly, and quite outside the poor fellow's expectations, there came to him the news the other morning that he was the possessor by bequest of the to him large sum of £2,000.

Fermet almost went frantic with delight. His nerves stood the recurrence of thrills all day, but in the evening he got among the Longchamps cafes and was relating his luck for about the twentieth time when he fell dead.

KINDLING FIRE.



The kindling of fire by the friction of dry sticks is a common practice among savages to-day. The Fiji islanders do this; so also do the South Sea islanders, the North American Indians, and the Peruvians.

Pig That Selected Church Site.

Most Lancashire cyclists are familiar with Winwick, a village between Leigh and Warrington, surrounded by good roads, and no doubt many of these wheelers have been struck with the curious effigy of a pig carved in the tower of Winwick church.

It is said that when the church was being built a pig moved the foundation stone three times and at last allowed the stone to remain on the spot where the church now stands. An effigy was therefore placed in the church tower. The words "Winwick," uttered with a nasal twang, resemble the grunt of a pig, and this is also said to give the village its name.—Tit-Bits.

"It gives me pleasure to testify to the curative qualities of Peruna and Manalin.

"I was afflicted for over seven years with catarrh of the head, throat and digestive organs. I consulted many physicians, but they did me no good.

"One day I happened to read some testimonials in your Peruna almanac. I decided to try Peruna and Manalin. I bought a bottle of each, and after taking them for a week I noticed a change for the better. So I kept it up, and after using twelve bottles I was perfectly cured.

"I also gave the medicine to my children and they had the same beneficial result. I would never be without these remedies in the house.

"I highly recommend Peruna and Manalin to all my friends, and in fact to everybody."

Miss Mildred Grey, 110 Weimer St., Appleton, Wis., writes:

"It gives me pleasure to recommend Peruna for catarrh of the stomach. I had this disease for a number of years, and could not enjoy a mouthful of food that I ate. It was indeed a great relief when I hit upon Peruna, and obtained decided results from the first. I took six bottles before I felt entirely cured of my trouble, but I had an aggravated case."

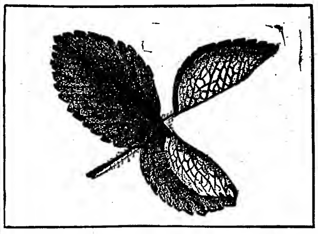
The Strawberry Leaf Roller



Strawberry Leaves Showing Their Appearance After Being Folded by the Roller. (After Weed.)

This insect can most easily be recognized by its larval stage, especially by its manner of folding a leaf in order to make for itself a habitat. An adequate idea of this insect can be had from the accompanying figures. If one of these folded leaves be examined it will be seen that the folds are held together by fine silken threads. These were spun by the brownish or greenish larva which will nearly always be found between the folds. The larva does its greatest damage by eating the lining surface of its abode.

The larvae cannot be reached very easily by poisons, so the only practical way of combating this species is to scatter straw over the vines, after the berries are gathered, and burn it. If done early enough this will not damage the vines.

HE FED SOME OLD EWES

A sheepman packed his grip one day
And went to Omaha, so they say,
To buy some feeder ewes.

He thought he was on to all the tricks
Of the men who sell the stock yards bricks,
When he bought that bunch of ewes.

The sheep he bought were old and gray,
They'd always fed on musty hay,
A poor old bunch of ewes!

He gave them three square meals a day,
He cornered all the alfalfa hay,
To feed that bunch of ewes.

The more he fed the worse they got,
And it made that sheepman awful hot
At that bunch of ancient ewes.

One day a bee in his bonnet flew,
He thought of something he would do
To fatten that bunch of ewes.

Of sawdust he let them eat their fill,
And better sheep ne'er went to kill
Than that bunch of stock yard ewes.

He got a car on the U. P. road,
And back to Omaha sent a load,
Of sawdust fattened ewes!

He packed them in with all his might,
But he packed them in a little too tight,
That set of sawdust ewes.

Their legs couldn't bend, so full were they filled,
But broke right off and the sawdust spilled
Out of that bunch of ewes.

The salesman thought 'twas a joke on him,
And shipped them back to their home again,
That bunch of crippled ewes.

When the sheepman rose at break of day,
What did he see out eating hay
But that same old bunch of ewes.

He raved and swore and tore his hair,
Blue smoke went curling through the air,
As he gazed on that bunch of ewes.

He sent those sheep by the chloroform route,
To the place that sheepmen talk about,
When they read the price of ewes.

His form with care and age had bent,
And the evening sun of his life was spent,
Since he bought that bunch of ewes.
So he went up where all sheepmen go,
('Tis only the salesmen go below,
Who deal in antique ewes.)

St. Peter opened the portals wide,
He took the sheepman right inside—
He'd heard of that bunch of ewes.

"That salesman must to the regions go,
For there you reap whate'er you sow,
If it's only a bunch of ewes.

"Through eternal years must stay with them,
Nor look on the face of man again,
Only see those ghostly ewes."

From morn 'till night and night 'till morn,
He feeds those sheep on roasted corn,
The ghosts of those aged ewes.

The sheepman plays his harp of gold,
Looks down in pity on the man that sold
That bunch of faded ewes.

All salesmen should this moral heed,
When a sheepman wants some stuff to feed,
Don't sell 'im a bunch o' old ewes.

FRUIT TREES EXHAUST SOIL

By Prof. H. Garman, Kentucky Experiment Station.

In considering the reasons why apple and other fruit trees do not bear as many or as fine apples as they did in the early days, I have been impressed with the importance of supplying the trees with fertilizers as the soil becomes exhausted, and am satisfied that the greater relative difficulty experienced nowadays in keeping fruit trees in good condition is in part due to an exhaustion of the soil.

Trees forage more widely than smaller plants, and may not show the effects of starvation as suddenly or as soon, but they must show it in time if grown long on the same land without anything being returned to the soil to replace materials removed by the trees. In this relation I was struck recently by a statement which I encountered in Prof. Voorhees' interesting little book on Fertilizers. He says that 20 crops of apples of 15 bushels per tree, and 35 trees to the acre, equal 1,337 pounds of nitrogen, 310 pounds of phosphoric acid and 1,805 pounds of potash.

Twenty crops of wheat, of 15 bushels per acre, equal 660 pounds of nitrogen, 211 pounds of phosphoric acid and 324 pounds of potash.

Therefore, according to Prof. Voorhees, 20 crops of apples remove more than twice as much nitrogen, half as much again phosphoric acid, and nearly three times as much potash, as 20 crops of wheat.

A good farmer would hardly think of growing 20 successive crops of wheat on the same land, no matter how good it might be, and it would seem to be still greater folly, according to the figures given, to attempt to grow 20 successive crops of apples without returning anything to the soil.

WHAT MANURE DID FOR ONE FARM

By PROF. HARRY SNYDER.

My attention was recently called to a farm in Dakota county, Minnesota, where, when the country was being settled, a strip of apparently poor land was passed over as worthless for grain production. Later it was homesteaded by a settler who came in a one-horse outfit. Instead of raising grain, this man started in on a small scale to feed live stock. Screenings and grain could be obtained for the hauling. The manure was judiciously used and the soil responded to this method of farming. In a few years upon this apparently poor soil larger crops were produced than upon the surrounding wheat lands. To-day it is one of the most productive farms in the county, and its fertility is the result of farm manure.

Farm manures are valuable because they add new stores of fertility to the soil. They change the inactive plant food to more available forms through the production of humates which are utilized by crops as foods. They improve the physical properties of soils, make them warmer, more responsive to cultivation, and regulate the water supply for crop growth. They add to the permanent crop producing power of the soil and regulate the supply of plant food by causing disintegration and other changes to take place. They aid in producing forage crops which contain the largest amount of protein and other available nutrients. Manured lands produce not only larger but more valuable crops.

Rains and Corn Crop.—Rains in late summer and early fall do not affect the corn crop as to percentage of grain to stalk. A good supply of water at that time increases the proportion of grain to stalk.

Pure White Lead is the Natural Paint Pigment

Numerous compounds are being offered to take the place of white lead as a paint, but no real substitute for it has yet been found. Pure White Lead has a peculiar property of amalgamating with the wood upon which it is used—added to this it has an elasticity which permits the paint to follow the natural expansion and contraction of the wood. Pure White Lead (with its full natural tenacity and elasticity, unimpaired by adulterants), alone fulfills all the requirements of the ideal paint. Every keg which bears the Dutch Boy trade mark is positively guaranteed to be absolutely Pure White Lead made by the Old Dutch Process.

All lead packed in 1907 bears this mark.

Save the Babies.

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twentytwo per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirtyseven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save a majority of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium, or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. Castoria operates exactly the reverse, but you must see that it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. Castoria causes the blood to circulate properly, opens the pores of the skin and allays fever.

Letters from Prominent Physicians addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. A. F. Peeler, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in many cases and have always found it an efficient and speedy remedy."

Dr. E. Down, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in my practice for many years with great satisfaction to myself and benefit to my patients."

Dr. Edward Parrish, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria in my own household with good results, and have advised several patients to use it for its mild laxative effect and freedom from harm."

Dr. J. B. Elliott, of New York City, says: "Having during the past six years prescribed your Castoria for infantile stomach disorders, I most heartily commend its use. The formula contains nothing deleterious to the most delicate of children."

Dr. C. G. Sprague, of Omaha, Neb., says: "Your Castoria is an ideal medicine for children, and I frequently prescribe it. While I do not advocate the indiscriminate use of proprietary medicines, yet Castoria is an exception for conditions which arise in the care of children."

Dr. J. A. Parker, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Your Castoria holds the esteem of the medical profession in a manner held by no other proprietary preparation. It is a sure and reliable medicine for infants and children. In fact, it is the universal household remedy for infantile ailments."

Dr. H. F. Merrill, of Augusta, Me., says: "Castoria is one of the very finest and most remarkable remedies for infants and children. In my opinion your Castoria has saved thousands from an early grave. I can furnish hundreds of testimonials from this locality as to its efficiency and merits."

Dr. Norman M. Geer, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "During the last twelve years I have frequently recommended your Castoria as one of the best preparations of the kind, being safe in the hands of parents and very effective in relieving children's disorders, while the ease with which such a pleasant preparation can be administered is a great advantage."

Doubtful Evidence.

A certain elector in a Western constitucncy, who takes a keen interest in politics, has been twice confined in a lunatic asylum. On each occasion when discharged from durance he obtained a formal written statement from the proper authority declaring thnt he was once more in his right demand. At a recent political meeting he was extremely excited, and constantly interrupted the speakers. The chairman attempted to bring him to order by gentle means, which failed, and then, by stern and dignified reproof, which aleo failed. At lest the chairman lost his patience.

"Look here, eir," he seid to the excited one, "you're behaving more like a madman than an elector!"

"Madman!" repeated the elector, with crushing seorn. "I've got two certificates of sanity in my pocket, and I'll bet you whet you like you haven't got one!"

Catarrh

To prove unquestionably, and beyond any doubt, that Catarrh of the nose and throat can be cured, I am furnishing patients through druggists, small free Trial Boxes of Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure. I do this because I am so certain, that Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure will bring actual substantial help. Nothing certainly, is so convincing as a physical test of any article of real, genuine merit. But that article must possess true merit, else the test will condemn, rather than advance it. Dr. Shoop's Catarrh Cure is a snow white, healing antiseptic balm, put up in beautiful nickel capped glass jars at 50c. Such soothing agents as Oil Eucalypt[illegible] Thymol, Menthol, etc., are incorporated into velvety, cream like Petrolatum, imported by Dr. Shoop from Europe. If Catarrh of the nose and throat has extended to the stomach, then by all means also use internally, Dr. Shoop's Restorative. Stomach distress, a lack of general strength, bloating, belching, biliousness, bad taste, surely call for Dr. Shoop's Restorative.

For uncomplicated catarrh only of the nose and throat nothing else, however, need be used

COUNTY DADS MEET

Hold Two Days' Business Session at the Court House in this City.

The board of county commissioners met at the county auditor's office Tuesday and yesterday and transacted a big bunch of county business that had accumulated since the last meeting.

The Hennepin Bridge company, Minneapolis, was given the contract to tear down the old wooden bridge in Emardville township and erect in its place a new steel structure. This contract was let under the emergency clause, which provides that commissioners may let a contract for a new bridge where occasion demands a speedy construction without advertising for bids. The new bridge will be modern in all respects and will be appreciated by the people out there.

The election of a janator for the court house to succeed J. O. Gjerberg, deceased, was taken up and Lucien Philion, who has acted in this capacity for several months past, was chosen. Mr. Philion has made a very popular janitor since taking charge over there, and his application was endorsed by all of the county officers. He is a careful and faithful employee and there is no question but what he will give satisfaction.

Mrs. Eleanor Tarrant, wife of Judge of Probate Tarrant, was appointed clerk of the probate court, and her bond was approved and filed. The duties of the probate office have become quite heavy since the acquisition of the new townships, and the commissioners deemed it advisable to give Nick some help.

The personal property list was reviewed and returned to auditor O'Brien.

An agreement was entered into whereby Red Lake county will pay twenty percent of the cost of a new typewriter for use of the stenographers of the district court.

The applications of Alfred Eve and Matt Skala for correction of assessment and abatement of taxes was granted.

The final estimate on county ditch No. 9 was accepted and the engineer discharged.

Lambert township was given $150 from the road and bridge fund.

The appointment of Otto E. Olson as asistent county superintendent of schools was approved. Mr. Olson wil put in the next two months assisting Superintendent McAnulty in getting caught up with the big bunnch of work that accumulates in his office during this season of the year.

The bonds of the various county depositories were approved. The list of banks is about the same as last year, except that the First State Bank of Plummer and People's State Bank of Thief River Falls were added to the list.

The usual bunch of bills was allowed and the board adjourned sine die yesterday.

Cure of the American Disease.

The menace to the health of Americans is said to be nervousness and many theories are advanced as to the best cure. Hot baths are recommended, air baths, the barefoot cure and others in turn. As a preventive measure a glass of pure malt tonic, such as golden grain belt beer is a wise precaution. It prevents nervous fatigue caused by an overworked brain and refreshes the tired worker. Order of your near dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

STEENERSON AN INVENTOR.

Has Patented a Swimming Mask of His Design.

Congressman Steenerson of Crookston has patented a swimming mask which he has invented and which will be a boon to swimmers, especially in salt water. It will also be a great help to swimmers when the water they are in is topped with waves. Swimmers at the lake summer resorts know the difficulty in swimming when a heavy wind is blowing causing waves. The waves sometimes follow so quickly that they cannot be avoided by the swimmer and mouth and nose are filled with the rolling water. Congressman Steenerson's invention is a hood-like contrivance which fits snugly over the swimmer's head. In the top will be two long tubes which stand erect above the head and furnish air to the swimmer. This will allow the swimmer to swim a foot or two below the surface and, as has been explained, will keep the waves from filling eyes and mouth with water and will enable one to enjoy a swim no matter what the condition of the surface of the water.

Mr. Eckstrom Denies Charge.

P. A. Eckstrom was in from Black River Tuesday and informs THE GAZETTE that the item published last week relative his alleged arrest in North Dakota a few weeks ago on the charge of violating the federal liquor law is false. Mr. Eckstrom tells us he was never engaged in that business and that the report printed in the dailies either confused the names or was made up out of whole cloth. Mr. Eckstrom has always been highly regarded personally in Red Lake county and this paper is glad to make the correction regretting very much that it gave circulation to an unwarranted statement.

NEW RURAL ROUTE

Patrons Tributary to Red Lake Falls Office Will Get Good Mail Service.

A new rural free delivery route from Red Lake Falls south and east has been recommended to the postoffice department, and Postmistress Marshall is daily expecting confirmation of the report with the necessary instructions for establishing the service and getting the route started. The proposed route will cover the territory south and east from Red Lake Falls in a very thorough manner, and the patrons effected thereby are naturally highly pleased with the prospect.

There will in reality be two routes which will probably be covered by one carrier, and they will be trayversed on alternate days.

For instance when they are established and the carrier contracted for, the mail will be carried on Monday over the following territory: Leaving Red Lake Falls and going south to Perrault station, thence east two miles, south one mile, east three miles, north one mile, east two miles to the Terrebonne church and postoffice where pouch mail will be left for the Terrebonne postoffice. Leaving Terrebonne the route is west one mile, north one mile, west one mile, south one mile, west two miles, north one mile west one and a half miles, and north again to Red Lake Falls.

On Tuesdays or each alternate day the carrier leaves Red Lake Falls and goes due east six miles, between the rivers, thence south to Terrebonne postoffice, leaving pouch mail thence to the church corner and one mile west, thence a mile north, west again one mile, south three miles, west three miles, north one mile, east two miles, west one and a half miles and back to Red Lake Falls.

This service will be given six days in the week, each alternate day over each route. Nearly all of the boxes are covered daily, except those south to Perrault station, and east two miles, which get every other day service. The Terrebonne postoffice, farmers in the vicinity of Terrebonne and as far south as the Demann farm will receive daily service, and with it the accommodation of registry, special delivery and everything else enjoyed by the Red Lake Falls office patrons. The inspector also stated that should the business warrant it, two carriers would be employed later on and each route covered daily.

This will be a great accommodation to the people tributary to this city, and every person living along the route should be willing and anxious to put up a government approved mail box in order to make the route a signal success from the start.

Postmistress Marshall and others here have been active in their efforts to get such a service to the people south and east, and that they have have been successful is surely pleasing news to all concerned.

At the same time the the recommendation for this route was forwarded to the postal authorities, a suggestion was also put in for the enlargement of the present route from Brooks, which will take in the following additional territory to the present route: One and a half miles west, one mlie north, two west, two south, and three east back to Brooks. This will give the people out there excellent mail facilities, and the Brooks route will touch practically all desirable territory to that postoffice.

It is expected that confirmation of these orders will be received very shortly and the postoffice people hope to see the routes established and in running order no later than September 1, if not before.

From Missouri.

The naughty senior editor of the Windom Citizen says:

"The Adrian Democrat says a Minneapolis girl claims to wear a $10,000 diamond on her garter. We are from Missouri."

A large addition has been added to the CROOKSTON COLLEGE this summer. The building is up-to-date in every respect and will now accommodate 500 students. The college catalogue is just printed and you can get a copy free by writing to J. C. Sathre, Crookston, Minn.

NEW GROCERY STORE.

Exerie Chatel Will Open Up With Complete Stock.

Exerie Chatel has leased the Kaus block and next Monday expects to open up for business with a new and complete line of groceries, etc. Mr. Chatel intends to make his store an exclusive grocery, and states that he will sell the top grade goods at low prices. He announces in his ad elsewhere in today's paper that he will do an exclusive cash business, but will sell at prices not usually found in a city of this size.

Mr. Chatel is well known in southern Red Lake county, and will without doubt be successful in his business venture.

Annual School Meeting.

The annual school election will be held at the high school building Saturday evening of this week, at which time the election of two members of the board to succeed Messrs. N. M. Watson and A. P. Toupin will be necessary. It is not stated that there are any applicants for these positions aside from the gentlemen named and as their record as school and public officers is an excellent one it is not likely that any opposition will develop. Mr. Toupin has been the efficient clerk of the board for several years past, and his work in behalf of the success of our schools has had good effect in bringing them up to their present standard of excellence. Mr. Watson has served for the past two years and is considered well worthy of re-endorsement, also.

Too Many Starving Papers.

Hutchinson Leader: It is reported that about thirty consolidations or suspensions of newspapers have occured in Minnesota during the past eighteen months. The latest was the absorption of the Red Lake Falls Gazette by the Courier—State Librarian John King's paper—this week. Too many towns are tolerating two or more starving newspapers—literally starving—for no paper can do the same volume of business it lived well on ten years ago and exist in this day of high-priced type, paper, machinery, and labor. And few inland Minnesota towns have grown sufficiently in the past ten years to provide much of an increase in the volume of business for the newspaper. Red Lake Falls can doubtless support one credible newspaper plant—not more. Bro. King did the only thing that should be done under such circumstances—saved his contemporary from an ignominous death.

WILL BE BIG SHOW

Secretary Cosgrove Writes Regarding the Band and Big State Fair.

The Minnesota State Fair this year during the week of September 2-7, will be one of the biggest and best shows ever attempted by the state agricultural society, and according to Secretary Cosgrove the demands for space in the different exhibition buildings are already greater than can be accommodated. Nearly every county in the state will have an exhibit at this biggest of all big shows. Aside from the great exhibitions of live stock, grains, fruits, etc., the program of amusement events for fair week is a very elaborate one. The race program is in itself worthy of the attention and support of every citizen of the state, and with the great long array of entainments and amusements of other sorts the fair should prove a good drawing card to every resident of the North Star state.

The Red Lake Falls band has closed a contract for a four days' engagement at this greatest of all western shows, and the boys are hard at work getting in shape for the work they will be called upon to do. The band and people generally feel that this is an honor seldom realized by a country band, but the state-wide reputation of our bunch of musicians helped materially in securing this engagement.

In a letter to THE GAZETTE this week, Secretary Cosgrove calls attention to the band's engagement at the fair as follows: "Do all you can for the fair, as it will be a good one. We expect every man, woman and child in Red Lake Falls to come to the fair the days the band comes and plays. We feel that this will be a great ad for your band and of great benefit to the fair."

While it is not probable that "every man, woman and child in Red Lake Falls" will go the fair, nevertheless this part of Red Lake county should send a good representation of people along with the band boys.

The opportunity is splendid on this occasion to give Red Lake Falls and Red Lake county some advertising that it cannot get again in several years, and it should be embraced by those directly interested.

THE GAZETTE columns will contain the fair program and other announcements during the next few weeks.

TRIAL OF HAYWOOD

For Murder of Gov. Steunenberg.

Bar Testimony of the Defense.

Boise, July 6.—At the adjournment of the Steunenberg trial Wednesday the prosecution served notice of its intention to submit motions to strike out evidence of the defense unless the connecting-up testimony that has been promised is forthcoming.

Orchard's Story Attacked.

The defense operated along nearly all of its lines. There were attacks on Orchard's testimony at several points; there was a showing that union miners had been abused by the mine owners and militia at Cripple Creek and Telluride; that Pinkerton agents had advised violence and endeavored to prolong a strike; a woman who served with the relief committee that looked after the families of the deported miners at Cripple Creek swore that she had been twice arrested and twice warned that if she persisted in her work she would be deported, and another woman located Orchard with Detectives Scott and Sterling the night of the second attempt to wreck the Florence & Cripple Creek railway train.

Coates on the Stand.

Two of the witnesses figured conspicuously in the testimony of Orchard. They were David Coates, formerly lieutenant governor of Colorado, and Pat Moran, formerly a saloonkeeper of Cheyenne.

Coates denied Orchard's version of the plot to kidnap the children of August Paulson, and Moran denied that he made a trip from Cheyenne to Denver after the Independence station was blown up for the purpose of getting $500 from George A. Pettibone for Orchard.

Coates swore Orchard made threats against Steunenberg and that he loaned him $10 and that August Paulson loaned Orchard $300 on which to leave Wallace.

Beginning of End in Haywood Trial.

Boise, July 7. — The beginning of the end of the Haywood trial was reached yesterday. Counsel for the defense announced that, with the exception of three or four witnesses, their case in direct is before the jury. Charles H. Moyer, the accused president of the Western Federation of Miners, will be called as a witness on Monday next. He will be followed by William D. Haywood, the defendant.

Judge Fremont Wood has asked counsel on both sides to submit their requests for instructions to the jury.

Agree on Instructions.

He has notified counsel that he will consider these requests and will agree with counsel as to what his instructions shall be in order that the arguments on both sides may be limited to what the jury shall be allowed to consider as evidence.

In adjourning court yesterday afternoon until next Monday, Judge Wood said he hoped the interval would be utilized by counsel in preparation that would prevent further delay and bring the case to as speedy a close as possible. Counsel for the defense and for the prosecution, after the adjournment yesterday afternoon were willing to admit the possibility of a verdict or disagreement in two weeks.

Discredit Orchard.

The five witnesses on the stand yesterday morning added support to those who have preceded them. They were called to testify concerning conditions existing in Colorado during the the disturbances at Cripple Creek and to show that there was no reason to call out the militia. Orchard was further discredited by Owen Barnes, a miner, who lived near the Independence mine, and who Orchard said assisted him in the manufacture of bombs. Barnes said he knew Orchard, Adams, Easterly and others, but flatly denied that he ever planned or discussed any criminal expedition with Orchard.

Depositions Read to Jury.

Boise, Idaho, July 10. — Part of the San Francisco depositions dealing with the Bradley explosion were read yesterday to the jurymen that are trying Haywood for the murder of Frank Steunenberg and the rest of them will be presented to-day. The reading began directly after the court sat, with Clarence Darrow and Senator Borah alternating for their respective sides. The depositions have an important bearing upon the case, but they contained no interest for the crowd, and the attendance was the lightest since the trial began.

Both sides seemed to be satisfied with the showing made by the depositions and their contents will probably furnish much material for directly opposed contention when the trial reaches the argument stage. One objection from the state constituted the sole interruption for the day, and during all the rest of the time counsel for both sides seemed united in getting all the matter in the sworn statements before the jury.

Charge Plot to Convict Haywood.

Boise, Idaho, July 11.—The defense in the Steunenberg murder case yesterday charged that Detective James McParland has been guilty of an attempt to manufacture testimony against William D. Haywood, but was unsuccessful in getting the basis and details of the charge before the jury.

Alva A. Swain, a newspaper correspondent at Denver, was called to the stand and questioned as to a conversation he had with Detective McParland in Denver last fall. Senator Borah, for the state, objected to the conversation on the grounds that no foundation had been laid for it.

To Show Conspiracy.

Clarence Darrow, for the defense, who was examining Swain, explained that the testimony was offered for the purpose of showing a conspiracy existed between the mine owners and the Pinkertons to secure the conviction of the prisoner.

"McParland approached this witness in an attempt to manufacture testimony," he declared, "and I believe we have a right to show it."

Judge Wood said there was nothing in the evidence that furnished a proper foundation for the introduction of such testimony, and sustained the state's objection. The defense took an exception and said they would later make another attempt to secure the admission of Swain's testimony.

Orchard Blamed Steunenberg.

Allen F. Gill, formerly master mechanic of the Tiger and Poorman mine and later city engineer of Spokane, and his wife, were also witnesses for the defense. They jointly related that Harry Orchard attempted to sell them his interest in the Hercules mine in February and March, 1899, which was just prior to his departure from the Coeur d'Alenes, and Mr. Gill, who saw Orchard in Spokane a month before he killed Steunenberg, testified that Orchard said that it was because of Steunenberg that he lost his interest in the Hercules.

Almost the entire day was given over to the reading of the rest of the San Francisco depositions.

END OF BROWNSVILLE AFFAIR.

Report of Senate Committee Will Be a Compromise—May Re-Enlist.

Washington, July 9. — The report upon the Brownsville investigation by the senate committee will not be made until congress convenes in December, but it may be set down at this time that it will pave the way for the discharged colored soldiers to reenter the army. Senator Foraker may be satisfied with the conclusions of the majority of the committee that he will make no minority report. There are assurances also that President Roosevelt will be satisfied with this result.

The program as outlined provides: First—The committee will make no direct charge in its report that the negro soldiers, individually or collectively, shot up the town of Brownsville, but will let the people draw their own conclusions from the testimony taken in the case, which will be printed and made a part of the report.

Second—The committee will recommend the passage of a law by congress which will authorize the discharged soldiers to re-enlist "without prejudice" and their army status to be fixed as it was before they were dishonorably discharged, providing each soldier who desires to re-enlist shall make a statement that he did not participate in the shooting.

MUST STAY IN JAIL.

Schmitz is Denied Bail and Privilege of Jaunts.

San Francisco, July 11. — Judge Dunne yesterday refused to admit Mayor Schmitz to bail and denied him the privilege of visiting his attorneys. Schmitz appeared in court to ask for bail and to answer the indictments charging him with accepting bribes from the gas company and the United Railroads. In the first he failed. The second was a formality and was carried through without incident.

Schmitz left the court room with his attorneys on his return journey to the county jail, where he will have to wait until the papers for his appeal are prepared.

$25,000 Bail for Club Man.

Washington, July 11. — Gaston P. Phillip, the Washington and New York club man who has been held in jail here since May 18 on the charge of murdering Frank MacAhoy, yesterday was admitted to bail in the sum of $25,000.

FLOOD IS SPREADING.

Army of Men Fight to Save 20,000 Acres of Cultivated Land.

Bakersfield, Cal., July 7. — Uninterruptedly the waters of Buena Vista lake are still pouring through the great gap of a broken levee, and slowly the flood is spreading toward the San Emidio road, where an army of men and horses is feverishly at work on an embankment that it is hoped will save 20,000 acres of cultivated land from inundation.

BOY AND FATHER DROWN.

Heroic Parent Plunges to Death When Son Is in Peril.

Rochester, N. Y., July 7.—Charles Beck, sixteen years old, attempted to swim the canal with his trousers on yesterday, but his strength deserted him in midstream and he called for help.

HAYWOOD ON STAND IN OWN DEFENSE

DENIES GUILT OF MURDER OF STEUNENBERG AND OF OTHER CRIMES.

ORCHARD'S STORY IS DENIED

STATE IN CROSS-EXAMINATION ATTACKS THE TESTIMONY OF MOYER.

Boise, Idaho, July 13.—William D. Haywood took the oath yesterday as a witness in his own defense, and in a lengthy narrative of his life and his work as a leader of his fellow miners, denied guilt of the murder of Frank Steunenberg and the manifold crimes charged against him by Harry Orchard.

Haywood's testimony was chiefly characterized with positive denials of allegations made against him by the prosecution. He denied that he met Orchard until some time after the Vindicator explosion; denied that he sent Orchard back to Cripple Creek to blow up the Independence station; denied participation in the Lyta Gregory murder, and denied suggesting or discussing the Steunenberg murder.

Never Gave Orchard Money.

He swore that he never gave Orchard any money at any time or place for any purpose. He declared that he never made a threat against Steunenberg, whom he said he regarded only as he did any politician who is being swayed by capitalistic influence. The direct examination had not reached the connection of Jack Simpkins and the action of the federation after Steunenberg was murdered when adjournment interrupted it.

The state completed the cross-examination of Charles H. Moyer at noon and in dealing with his testimony directed its strongest attack against the circumstances under which the federation, at the suggestion of Jack Simpkins, came to the relief of Orchard when he was arrested for killing Steunenberg.

Denied by Moyer.

Senator Borah, who conducted the examination, emphasized the connection of Jack Simpkins and the federation and the fact that the federation without inquiry as to the guilt or innocence of Orchard gave $1,500 from its treasury to provide for his defense.

Moyer denied knowing anything about the $1,500 that Haywood sent to Jack Simpkins a few days before Steunenberg was assassinated, and which is traced to Orchard by an unsigned note.

GOVERNOR'S SALUTE FATAL.

Reception to Gov. Mead of Washington Marred by Fatality.

Port Townsend, Wash., July 13. — One man killed and two severely burned marred the reception to Gov. Mead and staff at Fort Worden yesterday.

As a governor's salute of seventeen guns was fired from a battery one gun became overheated and as the charge was driven home it exploded. Private Tohassen, Sixty-second company, received the full force of the charge, which blew off one arm and badly mashed his hand.

MILL CITY MAN SHOT.

Peppered From Head to Foot During a Quarrel.

Lakota, N. D., July 13.—B. McHarry of Minneapolis was brought to town from McVille, suffering with severe gunshot wounds. It is alleged that he became engaged in an altercation with Andrew Tiegan of McVille and the latter took a shot at him with both barrels of a shotgun.

Shot Woman He Loved.

Tacoma, Wash., July 13.—Driven to desperation by the false promises of the woman whom he loved, Frank Harvey early yesterday shot and instantly killed Mrs. Gertrude Hall and seriously if not fatally wounded Sherman Blanchard, whom he found in a room with her. After the shooting the murderer gave himself up.

2-CENT LAW LEADS TO THREAT

WISCONSIN RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS MAY RESIGN, THEY DECLARE.

Madison, Wis., July 13. — Both houses of the state legislature yesterday passed the senate 2-cent fare bill with the amendment added in the assembly, and as a result the state administration is threatened with the resignation of the entire state railway commission.

After a hearing conducted by the commission as an inquiry into the reasonableness of an enforced reduction in rates in Wisconsin, that body decided that a 2 1-2 cent fare was the lowest that could in justice be imposed on the railroads of the state, and so reported.

The bill now passed by the legislature will go to the governor for signature, and the commissioners threaten to resign of the measure is so recognized. Under the terms of the bill it would become effective Aug. 15.

NO FOUNDATION FOR TALK OF WAR

JAPAN IS TOO WISE TO PICK A QUARREL, SAYS CHAIRMAN HULL.

MAKE APPEAL TO PRESIDENT

PEACE PROPAGANDISTS FEAR RESULT OF SENDING FLEET TO PACIFIC.

Washington, July 11.—Developments in Washington and elsewhere, as disclosed by official expressions here and dispatches from other important sources fail to indicate that there is any sound foundation for talk of war between the United States and Japan, but interesting sidelights on past discussions were thrown from many directions

Congressman John A. T. Hull of Iowa, chairman of the house committee on military affairs, in an interview at Des Moines, said:

"Neither Japan nor the United States wants war at this time. There is a big element in Japan who would welcome war, but the ruling classes are too wise to pick a quarrel with the United States.

"If there is war we will at first lose the Philippines and Hawaiian islands, but we would triumph in the end, for the United States would build warships and fight out a victory.

"We are the only nation which can conduct a war and get rich at the same time."

View With Alarm.

The executive committee of the Universal Peace union at a meeting in Philadelphia yesterday placed itself on record as opposed to sending a fleet of warships to the Pacific ocean. Resolutions were adopted declaring that the sending of a fleet to the Pacific is unwise, inopportune and irritating, and appealing to the president to withhold any such demonstration.

At Boston the Anti-imperialist league adopted resolutions appealing for action against "the continued and indefinite retention of the Philippine islands."

Fortify the Islands.

ONE MAN KILLED AND MANY INJURED—PROPERTY LOSS $250,000.

Louisville, July 11.—A terrific wind storm burst upon this city yesterday afternoon and brought death to one man and injury to several other persons.

Many horses and mules were killed, buildings were unroofed, smaller structures were blown down and unprecedented damage done to shade trees all over the city. The records of the weather bureau show that the maximum velocity of the wind was sixty-eight miles an hour, and the wind blew at the rate of sixty miles for fifteen minutes. Several streets are impassable for blocks. Street car service was suspended for several hours.

Both telephone companies report a serious interruption to their services.

M'CLEARY WILL NEGOTIATE.

Assistant Postmaster General Goes to Europe on Postal Business.

Washington, July 11. — Postmaster General Meyer announced yesterday that the North German Lloyd and Hamburg-American lines had informed the German postal administration that on Jan. 1 next they would terminate the present agreement relative to the maintenance of sea postoffices on their steamers because the compensation allowed was not deemed sufficient. The companies, however, have made an offer of a rate at which they will continue the service. Mr. Meyer has decided to send Second Assistant Postmaster General McCleary to Germany to make a new contract.

The German government bears half the expense and is interested with this government in continuing the arrangement. Sea postoffices are maintained on vessels of the American White Star, Hamburg-American and North German Lloyd lines, trips being made between New York and Germany, New York and Southampton and New York and Liverpool. Recently the postmaster general stated that he intended, if possible, to establish the sea postoffices on the steamers of the Cunard line plying between Liverpool, Queenstown and New York, and also on the steamers of the French line.

"Such sea postoffices," he said, "materially aid the New York postoffice in handling mail brought over by the steamers and greatly facilitate its delivery to addresses in that city and expedite the forwarding of such of it as is intended for other postoffices in the United States. Mr. McCleary will sail on the Baltic July 11 and will also hold conferences with the French and English postal authorities."

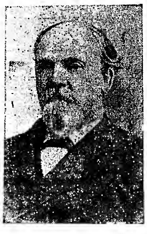
THE STATE DAY BY DAY

News of Interest.

AT 80 YEARS, TAKES SWEETHEART OF HIS YOUTH AS HIS BRIDE



Former Congressman J. B. Wakefield of Blue Earth, Minn., at the age of eighty years, took as his bride on Wednesday a sweetheart of his youth and of equal age—Mrs. Lydia Nobles of Cleveland, Ohio, who counted him among her admirers sixty years ago. Mr. Wakefield has been in feeble health, but not in a condition that deprives him of the hope and expectation that he will live many years longer, especially as the lonely life he has led since the death of his former wife a number of years ago now has become brightened by the presence at his side of one who not only can enjoy the events of the present, but also can return with him in memory to the days of more than half a century ago, when they were lovers and had the same associations.

Mr. Wakefield was one of the organizers of Blue Earth. He went there from Shakopee, Minn., in February, 1856, with H. P. Constans and others.

He was married in 1864. His present wife and he were lovers sixty years ago, when they both resided at Paynesville, Ohio.

In 1806 Mr. Wakefield was elected speaker of the house of representatives of Minnesota, and was state senator from the Blue Earth district in 1867-1869. In 1875 he was elected lieutenant governor, and was re-elected in 1877. In the fall of 1882 he was elected to congress and was re-elected in 1884. In 1886 Old Trinity college conferred upon him the degree of doctor of laws.

ADDS MUCH TO LAND VALUES.

Drainage Is More Successful Than Was Expected.

As a result of inspection by the state officers of the work being done in deepening and straightening the Roseau river, the state auditor has withdrawn from public sale all swamp lands in the northern part of the state which has been advertised as offered for sale. State officials made an investigation last week of the work being done on the Roseau river toward assisting in draining the swamp lands belonging to the state.

A tract of 155,000 acres was recently drained drained by the state. The drains emptied into the Roseau river. But there was not sufficient fall of the river to drain the land properly, and it was decided to deepen the channel of the river and take out some of the kinks which prevent a rapid flow. This work has progressed so far that the beneficial results on the swamp are very marked. It is expected that the dredging process will be completed within a year.

The members of the state party investigated the river for twenty miles or more in a launch and were more than pleased with the progress which has been made.

The results already obtained are very satisfactory and the prospects are that the cost of drainage will not be more than 75 cents an acre when the whole task of deepening the river is completed. The biggest dredge in the state is at work on the project.

Organize for Trolley.

The syndicate of Mankato capitalists that is to build the street railway line at that place have organized the Mankato Electric Traction company, with W. L. Hixon, president; Fred Kron, vice president; W. D. Willard, secretary and treasurer, and H. E. Hance, superintendent. An order for 300 tons of 60-pound rails was placed for delivery in thirty days or sooner. This line is to be built by a construction company of Chicago, which has lately completed the line at Wausau, Wis. The street railway company will incorporate in West Virginia.

State's Bill for the Fourth.

There was no patriotic demonstration at the state prison and the reformatory inmates only remembered the day with a special treat of candy and nuts. In the other institutions, however, there were fireworks. Employes conducted the fireworks display and there were pyrotechnic demonstrations on the grounds of all the insane hospitals and asylums, also at the Red Wing training school, the Faribault school for feeble-minded and the Owatonna state school.

Minnesota Boy an Orator at Big Fair

Harol Sorlien of Granite Falls, Minn., took part in the program of the Jamestown exposition last Friday as a boy orator, one of twenty selected to deliver orations and declamations. This feature for American boys was in charge of the editor of a Detroit (Mich.) magazine, who honored Master Sorlien with the appointment. The boy's oration was, in part, as follows:

"Yesterday we celebrated throughout this glorious land of ours Independence day, that day which to every true American ever since the old bell in Chestnut street rang out the glad tidings has meant so much.

"Yesterday we reviewed the history of our country's life, recalled the lofty deeds of departed years, the toil and suffering, the defeats and victories of heroic men—of men who made this nation great and free.

"Of the many thousands who shared the gloom and glory of those seven years not one remains, but instead there does remain that nation, the leader of all nations of the world—the United States of America.

"When Columbus landed at San Salvador little did he realize what a grand and glorious country he had discovered for you and for me to live in, and now, boys, it remains for us to make the best use of the innumerable opportunities offered us on every hand. We are every one of us bound to do this, for it will be but a few years hence when we will be called upon to take the rudder and steer the ship of state in such a way that the world will say there lives another Washington, another Lincoln, another Roosevelt. We cannot all become president or governors, but, boys, we can all become at least good honest American citizens."

TOURISTS AT CAPITOL.

Number of Visitors at State House Is Increasing.

The number of visitors at the capitol grows greater as the summer tourist season approaches its height. Seldom a day passes that 900 to 1,000 people do not admire the beauties of Minnesota's state house. The three guides which the state furnishes for half-hourly trips through the building are greatly appreciated by visitors, especially from the East, where guides must be tipped liberally before they will tell anything they know.

"Most of the people are travelers from the East and South," said one of the guides yesterday as he handed out the pamphlet of description of the building. "Half the people in St. Paul don't know what there is in the building, but every day hundreds of people from other states exclaim over the decorations."

CAN'T WAIVE SUIT.

Roads Compelled to Collect for Undercharges.

Railroads must collect undercharges on freight shipments by hook or crook. If they can't get them any other way they must bring suit. This is, in effect, a ruling made by the interstate commerce commission on the case of a road in Minnesota, which asked permission to waive suit for a $7 undercharge made through clerical error. The company pleaded that it would cost more to litigate the claim than it was worth, but the commission replied that suit must be begun if the money could not be collected in any other way. The attitude of the commission was that the receiver otherwise would be the beneficiary unless the money was collected from him.

Plan to Sue State.

Flood sufferers along the Minnesota valley are to make an effort to recover from the state for the damage that has been done to their crops and lands through the extension of the county drainage systems between St. Peter and Big Stone lake. They hold that, as the state has permitted the owners of highland farms to improve their property by draining sloughs and marshes, it should be held responsible for the resultant losses along the bottoms, and so they will ask that the next legislature reimburse them.

DID NOT PLANT CARP.

State Game and Fish Commission Pleads Not Guilty.

A controversy has been started in the vicinity of Mankato, where carp have proved to be such a nuisance, destroying good fishing grounds in the lakes, over the question of who was responsible for placing them in the lakes. The state game and fish commission having been accused of it, Capt. William Reid of Fairmont, former member of the commission, asserted that it should not be held responsible for the introduction of carp. He says:

"To my personal knowledge this is not true. I was appointed a member of the fish and game commission by Gov. McGill twenty-one years ago and have served in that capacity most of the time since. About thirty years ago Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and several other states imported large numbers of carp and planted them in their waters.

"About twenty years ago some of the fish commissioners of this state desired to introduce the carp into Minnesota waters, but Dr. Sweeney, a member of the commission, was dead set against it. To convince the commission that carp were not good eating he had one of the fish cooked and served to the members of the commission at one of their meetings. All agreed then that he was right.

"The commission had some of the carp fry at one time and sent out fifteen or twenty lots of twenty-five fish each to persons to plant in ponds on their farms. They were mostly German farmers who asked for them. Some may have escaped from these ponds into public waters, but I think that the carp that now infest the lakes and streams come from the Mississippi river, which has been filled with the fish from stock planted in other states. The high water of recent years has been favorable to their spread. But our fish and game commission is innocent of the charge, and the correction should be made."

NEW ULM TO HAVE LID.

Mayor Is Opposed to Sunday Closing, but Promises Law Enforcement.

The ministers of the different Protestant churches in New Ulm held a mass meeting at the Congregational church recently. Mayor Silverson and other prominent people of the city were invited and the church was packed with people. The Sunday closing law was fully discussed, the ministers contending that the saloons were the cause of a great deal of poverty and distress, especially when the head of the family dissipated his week's earnings in the saloon, and felt that now was the time for the mayor of the city to assist them in doing away with this evil. They felt that the saloonkeeper and the patron owed it to their families and the church to obey the Sabbath like all law-abiding citizens.

They were followed by Dr. O. C. Strickler and Attorney H. Flor, who spoke on the proposition. The former counseled moderation and the latter believed that in order to do away with some of the abuses in the saloon business it could not be accomplished by closing the saloons on Sunday, but by the enforcement of the laws now in force in preventing drunkards from securing liquor.

In discussing the question the ministers not alone spoke in favor of the Sunday closing law, but advocated prohibition.

Mayor Silverson said that he was fully aware what the law was relative to Sunday closing, and stated that if he had sole power in the matter he would never close saloons on Sunday. He did not believe in the principle of the Sunday closing law. Inasmuch as the law was plain and definite, he assured them that it would be enforced, but did not say when he would give the order.

WILL TAX THE CARS.

Pullman Company Fails to File Acceptance of Gross Earnings Tax.

The Pullman Sleeping Car company apparently has decided it would rather pay taxes on the number and value of the cars operated than a flat 4 per cent on its gross income in the state. According to chapter 453 of the Laws of 1907 the sleeping car companies were given until June 1 to file with the auditor a resolution of its board of directors accepting the alternative of a 4 per cent tax on the gross earnings within the state.

Since they failed to do this they are to be taxed on assessment levied by the board of equalization on the report of the number of cars of the various classes which run into or through the state, and the average value of each, together with the number of miles they traveled in this state. While this act is in force this will be the manner of taxation in Minnesota.

TO BUILD BOTH DITCHES.

A final hearing on the judicial ditch in Lyon and Lincoln counties has just been held at Tyler, with Hon. Judge Olson presiding. After all objections were placed and the motion from Thomas Davis for a jury trial on benefits and damages was overruled by the judge, the final order was issued for the establishment of both ditches. Further proceedings for construction of the ditches will be pushed with energy and perhaps water will flow in the new canal early this fall.

THE Adrian Democrat discovered that an editor in South Dakota after 20 years' hard labor finds himself worth $200,000. An aunt of his died and left him $199,998.75. The other $1.25 he managed by diligence and scrupulous saving to amass himself.

MARY MCFADDEN hands out this bit of philosophy: "It is the habit of many boors to excuse their want of common politeness by sneering at those who employ social usages as stuck up and insincere. Politeness even if insincere, is much to be preferred to rudeness."

A SCOTCHMAN visited a neighboring town and in walking around, saw no children, only grownup men and women. He wondered much at this and asked an old man: "How often are children born in this town?" "Only once," replied the old man as he proceeded on his way.

HARRIMAN is human after all. Like the rest of mankind, he had never neglected an opportunity to grab everything in sight. The rest of us have been lame, however, in giving him an opportunity. It is just as necessary to curb the passions and thieving proclivities of a railroad magnate as the lowliest amongst us.

THE Red Lake Falls creamery paid out more than $3,000 to its patrons last month. The prosperous condition of the creamery has bad a great deal to do with the upward tend of business in general. The creamery ought to bring in three times this amount monthly, and it can be made to do so as soon as the farmers can be made to realize the importance of the dairy business.

HERE is something that may throw a scare into the dandelions. Prof. Baily of North Dakota says: "We find that iron sulphate kills young dandelions with one spraying, but where the roots are thick it may be necessary to spray several times. We recommend the use of iron sulphate at the rate of one pound to each four gallons of water. You can spray it on the plants with any sprayer that will throw a fine spray wetting the leaves. Do the work in the morniog when it is not liable to rain. The leaves will die after the second or third day. We have not been in the habit of reccommeoding this substance for other weeds than mustard or kingheads but of late we have been gettiog such good results with dandelions that we think it worth while for others to try it. It does not injure the grass."

THE St. Hilaire Spectator has a new idea regarding the county seat scrap, and while THE GAZETTE doesn't say "amen" we will let the readers see what the Spectator says:

> Another call for the meeting of the 'county dads" has been posted, the date for such being the 20th inst. The "special" is for the purpose of considering the county seat removal petition, and it is hardly likely any of the commissioners will stay away this time. Would it not be well to put weeels under the county capitol, and while Thief River Falls and Red Lake Falls were fighting over the possession of such, a St. Hilaire citizen with a mule team and careworn expression might hitch thereto and locate the blamed thing on a most beautiful site on the mill dam at St. Hilaire. Our awakening from a dream of strawberry shortcake with Jersey cream for seasoning would not be so bad, and then not a farmer in the whole county and but few others would vote to have the county seat removed to Thief River Falls.

DIVIDING MINNESOTA.

There has been some desultory talk about dividing Minnesota and creating a new state of the northern half, but the proposition has not been entertained in any quarter, seriously. It might be of interest, though, to recall the fact that when Minnesota was asking for admission 'way back in the '50s, a powerful faction wanted Northern Minnesota and the land now embraced in the state of North Dakota, left as Dakota Territory, while the southern part of Miouesota and what is now South Dakota included in the confines of Minnesota.

The argument was advanced that Northern Minnesota was "no good." The clique of "knockers" insisted that a harbor on Lake Superior would be detrimental rather than advantageous, because it might injure the river traffic. The unmeasured wealth of timber was considered a doubtful asset, while of course the mineral fields of St. Louis and Itasca counties were undiscovered and undreamed of. On the whole Southern Minnesots was very much afraid that it was making much territory that was undesirable a part of itself,

Of course history has proved the fallacy of the aspersions cast on Northern Minnesota, and even though we wanted to withdraw and set up a state on our own account it is not to be expected that the conservative southern portion would yield its consent to give up so much that has added and is still adding to the wealth and glory of Minnesota.

And, then, the south half has been more fortunate. All she had worth stealing were her broad acres of fertile farm lands. Most of these were stolen, all right, but as they couldn't be eaten or carried off, in due course they came back to the people again, after due tribute had beeo exacted by the laod-grabbers.

But, alas! the poor North. Her forests are denuded, and all the immense wealth derived therefrom has gooe to build brown-stone fronts and create multi-millionaires in St. Paul, Minneapolis and elsewhere. She is being disemboweled of her iron, her lead, her copper and other minerals that Andy Carnegie may endow libraries and the Coreys wed their Mabel Gilmans.

But we've got the land—and most of it's good. We've forgotten about our loss and got back the soil—raising cows and clover and wheat and hogs, and getting rich again.

THE name of every taxpayer in Minnesota, together with his personal property statement, is to be furnished the new state tax commission. The commission has forwarded a circular to all county auditors asking for a "complete statem from the 1907 assessment roles the personal property of each i ividual taxpayer." This will k the auditors' office busy for a e, as well as the commission itself. f they study and digest every ersonal property assessment in th state.

"B. B." and "I LEAD" CIGARS

do not have fancy colored bands around them, but the smoker should buy a cigar for quality and not for the "trimmings."

The "B. B." cigar contains more pure tobacco than any 10c cigar on the market, and is made carefully and with a view to the comfort of the smoker. The money that is necessarily spent to sell the foreign brands of cigars is put into the quality of the "B. B." Why shouldn't they be better....................

The board of county commissioners met as a board of equalization Monday and went over the books of the assessors. They expect to hunt bear and other wild game of the forest upon their trip, but Ernie very discreetly left all his ammunition home and will be satisfied with snapshots of what they see.

Rev. G. Bollinger left Monday for his home at Burt, Iowa, after having spent two weeks here, during which time he occupied the pulpit at the Presbyterian church. Rev. Bollinger gave good satisfaction to the members of the congregation during his short stay here, and made many friends among the people of the city. However, the Presbyterian people have as yet made no call for a pastor to fill the pulpit here, as they have one or two others that they desire to meet and hear before making their call. Rev. Bollinger was well pleased with Red Lake Falls and would be satisfied to come here should a call be given him.

The fight for honors in the north line league, composed of Argyle, Warren, Hallock and Stephen, is a hot one and nearly all the season Warren, Argyle and Hallock have been tied for first place. Several more games are to be played before the schedule is completed, and they will surely be hot ones. The Argyle team wants Harry to finish the season, with them, but he has not yet decided as to whether he will do so or not.

Viewers to Report on Ditch.

Thief River Press: Engineer George Ralph and several members of the county board of commissioners will go over Rocksbury ditch No. 1 next week and endeavor to close up the long standing entanglement over the delayed completion of the waterway. As has been stated before more than once, this ditch was begun several years ago but owing to the contractor becoming bankrupt and from other causes growing out of the deal the ditch was never completed, although practically all the money due on the completed ditch was paid to the contractor. For some time past George Ralph, the Crookston engineer in charge, has been endeavoring to get the matter settled and has had men at work on the ditch. Whether the work has been thoroughly done will now be decided by the viewers.

SISTER ROSE.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

CHAPTER XI.—(CONTINUED.)

"Charles!" cried his sister, breaking away from him and appealing to her husband, "who are these men? What are they here for?"

He gave her no answer.

"Louis Trudaine," said Lomaque, slowly drawing the order from his pocket, "in the name of the Republic, I arrest you."

"Rose, come back," cried Trudaine.

It was too late; she had broken from him, and in the recklessness of terror had seized her husband by the arm.

"Save him!" she cried. "Save him, by all you hold dearest in the world! You are that man's superior, Charles—order him from the room!"

Danville roughly shook her hand off his arm.

"Lomaque is doing his duty. Yes," he added with a glance of malicious triumph at Trudaine—"Yes, doing his duty. Look at me as you please—your looks won't move me. I denounced you! I admit it—I glory in it. I have rid myself of an enemy, and the State of a bad citizen. Remember your secret visit to the house in the Rue de Clery!"

His wife uttered a cry of horror. She seized his arm again with both hands—frail, trembling hands—that seemed suddenly nerved with all the strength of a man's.

"Come here—come here! I must and will speak to you!"

She dragged him by main force a few paces back, towards an unoccupied corner of the room. With deathly cheeks and wild eyes she raised herself on tiptoe, and put her lips to her husband's ear. At that instant Trudaine called to her:

"Rose, if you speak I am lost!"

She stopped at the sound of his voice, dropped her hold on her husband's arm, and faced her brother, shuddering.

"Rose," he continued, "you have promised, and your promise is sacred. If you prize your honor, if you love me, come here—come here, and be silent."

He held out his hand. She ran to him; and laying her head on his bosom burst into a passion of tears.

Danville turned uneasily towards the police agents. "Remove your prisoner," he said. "You have done your duty here."

"Only half of it," retorted Lomaque, eying him attentively. "Rose Danville—"

"My wife!" exclaimed the other. "What about my wife?"

"Rose Danville," continued Lomaque, impassibly, "you are included in the arrest of Louis Trudaine."

Rose raised her head quickly from her brother's breast. His firmness had deserted him—he was trembling. She heard him whispering to himself, "Rose, too! Oh, my God! I was not prepared for that." She heard these words, and dashed the tears from her eyes, and kissed him, saying:

"I am glad of it, Louis. We risked all together—we shall now suffer together. I am glad of it!"

Danville looked incredulously at Lomaque, after the first shock of astonishment was over.

"Impossible!" he exclaimed. "I never denounced my wife. There is some mistake; you have exceeded your orders."

"Silence!" retorted Lomaque, imperiously. "Silence, citizen, and respect to a decree of the Republic!"

"You blackguard! show me the arrest order," said Danville. "Who has dared to denounce my wife?"

"You have," said Lomaque, turning on him with a grin of contempt. "You—and blackguard back in your teeth! You, in denouncing her brother! Aha! we work hard in our office; we don't waste time in calling names—we make discoveries. If Trudaine is guilty, your wife is implicated in his guilt. We know it, and we arrest her."

"I resist the arrest!" cried Danville. "I am the authority here. Who opposes me?"

The impassible chief agent made no answer. Some new noise in the street struck his quick ear. He ran to the window and looked out eagerly.

"Who opposes me?" reiterated Danville.

"Hark!" exclaimed Lomaque, raising his hand. "Silence, and listen!"

The heavy, dull tramp of men marching became audible as he spoke. Voices humming low and in unison the Marseillaise hymn, joined solemnly with the heavy, regular footfalls. Soon the flare of torchlight began to glimmer redder and redder under the dim starlight sky.

"Do you hear that? Do you see the advancing torchlight?" cried Lomaque, pointing exultingly into the street. "Respect to the national hymn, and to the man who holds in the hollow of his hand the destinies of all France. Hat off, Citizen Danville! Robespierre is in the street. His bodyguard, the Hard-hitters, are lighting him on his way to the Jacobin club! Who shall oppose you, did you say? Your master and mine; the man whose signature is at the bottom of this order—the man who with a scratch of his pen can send both our heads rolling together into the sack of the guillotine! Shall I call to him as he passes the house? Shall I tell him that Superintendent Danville resists me in making an arrest? Shall I? Shall I?" And in the immensity of his contempt Lomaque seemed absolutely to rise in stature as he thrust the arrest order under Danville's eyes, and pointed to the signature with the head of his stick.

Rose looked around in terror, as Lomaque spoke his last words—looked round, and saw her husband recoil before the signature on the arrest order, as if the guillotine itself had suddenly arisen before him. Her brother felt her shrinking back in his arms, and trembled for the preservation of her self-control if the terror and suspense of the arrest lasted any longer.

"Courage, Rose, courage!" he said. "You have behaved nobly; you must not fail now. No, no! Not a word more. Not a word till I am able to think clearly again, and to decide what is best. Courage, love; our lives depend on it. Citizen," he continued, addressing himself to Lomaque, "proceed with your duty—we are ready."

The heavy marching footsteps outside were striking louder and louder on the ground; the chanting voices were every moment swelling in volume; the dark street was flaming again with the brightening torchlight, as Lomaque, under pretext of giving Trudaine his hat, came close to him and turning his back towards Danville, whispered, "I have not forgotten the eve of the wedding and the lunch on the river-bank."

Before Trudaine could answer, he had taken Rose's cloak and hood from one of his assistants, and was helping her on with it. Danville, still pale and trembling, advanced a step when he saw these preparations for departure, and addressed a word or two to his wife; but he spoke in low tones, and the fast-advancing march of feet and sullen, low roar of singing outside drowned his voice. An oath burst from his lips, and he struck his fist with impotent fury on a table near him.

"The seals are set on everything in this room and in the bedroom," said Magloire, approaching Lomaque, who nodded, and signed to him to bring up the other police-agents at the door.

"Ready," cried Magloire, coming forward immediately with his men, and raising his voice to make himself heard, "Where to?"

Robespierre and his Hard-hitters were passing the house. The smoke of the torchlight was rolling in at the window; the tramping footsteps struck heavier and heavier on the ground; the low, sullen roar of the Marseillaise was swelling to its loudest, as Lomaque referred for a moment to his arrest-order, and then answered:

"To the prison St. Lazare!"

CHAPTER XII.

THE head-gaoler of St. Lazare stood in the outer hall of the prison, two days after the arrest at Trudaine's lodgings, smoking his morning pipe. Looking towards the court-yard gate, he saw the wicket opened, and a privileged man let in, whom he soon recognized as the chief agent of the second section of Secret Police. "Why, friend Lomaque," cried the gaoler, advancing towards the court-yard, "what brings you here this morning, business or pleasure?"

"Pleasure, this time, citizen. I have an idle hour or two to spare for a walk. I find myself passing the prison, and I can't resist calling in to see how my friend, the head gaoler, is getting on." Lomaque spoke in a surprisingly brisk and airy manner. His eyes were suffering under a violent fit of weakness and winking; but he smiled, notwithstanding, with an air of the most inveterate cheerfulness. Those old enemies of his, who always distrusted him most when his eyes were most affected, would have certainly disbelieved every word of the friendly speech he had just made, and would have assumed it as a matter of fact that his visit to the head-gaoler had some specially underhand business at the bottom of it.

"How am I getting on?" said the gaoler, shaking his head. "Overworked, friend—overworked. No idle hours in our department. Even the guillotine is getting too slow for us!"

"Sent off your batch of prisoners for trial this morning?" asked Lomaque, with an appearance of perfect unconcern.

"No; they're just going," answered the other. "Come and have a look at them." He spoke as if the prisoners were a collection of pictures on view, or a set of dresses just made up. Lomaque nodded his head, with an air of happy holiday carelessness. The gaoler led the way to an inner hall, and pointing lazily with his pipe-stem, said: "Our morning batch, citizen, just ready for the baking."

In the corner of the hall were huddled together more than thirty men and women of all ranks and ages; some staring round with looks of blank despair; some laughing and gossiping recklessly. Near them lounged a guard of "Patriots," smoking, spitting and swearing. Between the patriots and prisoners sat, on a rickety stool, the second gaoler—a humpbacked men, with an immense red moustachio—finishing his breakfast of broad beans, which he scooped out of a basin with his knife, and washed down with copious draughts of wine from the bottle. Carelessly as Lomaque looked at the shocking scene before him his quick eye contrived to take notice of every prisoner's face, and to descry in a few minutes Trudaine and his sister together at the back of the group.

"Now then, Apollo!" cried the gaoler, addressing his subordinate by a facetious nickname, "don't be all day starting that trumpery batch of yours! And harkye, friend, I have leave of absence, on business, at my Section this afternoon. So it will be your duty to read the list for the guillotine, and chalk the prisoners' doors before the cart comes to-morrow morning. 'Ware the bottle, Apollo, to-day; 'ware the bottle, for fear of accidents with the death-lists to-morrow."

"Thirsty July weather, this—eh, citizen?" said Lomaque, leaving the head-gaoler, and patting the hunchback in the friendliest manner on the shoulder. "Why, how you have got your batch huddled up together this morning. Shall I help you to shove them into marching order? My time is quite at your disposal. This is a holiday morning with me!"

"He! he! ha! what a jolly dog he is on his holiday morning!" exclaimed the head-gaoler, as Lomaque—apparently taking leave of his natural character altogether in the exhileration of an hour's unexpected leisure—began pushing and pulling the prisoners into rank, with numerous mock apologies, at which, not the officials only, but many of the victims themselves—reckless victims of a reckless tyranny—laughed heartily. Persevering to the last in his practical jest, Lomaque contrived to get close to Trudaine for a minute, and to give him one significant look before he seized him by the shoulders, like the rest. "Now, then, rear-guard," cried Lomaque, pushing Trudaine on. "Close the line of march, and mind you keep step with your young woman there. Pluck up your spirits, citoyenne! one gets used to everything in this world, even to the guillotine!"

While he was speaking and pushing at the same time, Trudaine felt a piece of paper slip quickly between his neck and his cravat. "Courage!" he whispered, pressing his sister's hand, as he saw her shuddering under the assumed brutality of Lomaque's joke.

Surrounded by the guard of "Patriots," the procession of prisoners moved slowly into the outer court-yard, on its way to the revolutionary tribunal, the humpbacked gaoler bringing up the rear. Lomaque was about to follow at some little distance, but the head-gaoler hospitably expostulated. "What a hurry you're in!" said he. "Now that incorrigible drinker, my second in command, has gone off with his batch, I don't mind asking you to step in and have a drop of wine."

"Thank you," answered Lomaque; "but I have rather a fancy for hearing the trial this morning. Suppose I come back afterwards? What time do you go to your section? At 2 o'clock, eh? Good! I shall try if I can't get here soon after one." With these words he nodded and went out. The brilliant sunlight in the courtyard made him wink faster than ever. Had any of his old enemies been with him, they would have whispered with themselves—"If you mean to come back at all, Citizen Lomaque, it will not be soon after one!"

On his way through the streets, the chief-agent met one or two police-office friends, who delayed his progress: so that when he arrived at the revolutionary tribunal, the trials of the day were just about to begin.

WRITING ON THE SKY.

Sign Device Which Promises to Be of Great Utility.

From The Electrical Review: The virtues of an electric monogram signal have already been referred to in these columns. The device is a sort of typewriter delivering its message, letter by letter, in midair, or at any distant point, in gigantic characters of light. The observers may be miles away and yet read the message with ease. The keyboard is manipulated exactly as in an ordinary typewriter and its function is to switch in or direct the current through a series of distributing wires, which are carried in a cable to the monogram or display frame. According to a predetermined scheme the keys exercise a selective function, and each one switches in the leading wires only, which connect with the members of the monogram constituting the letter of the alphabet which that particular key represents. By reference to the monogram one may easily trace any letter of the alphabet in form so nearly conventional as to be readily understood. Thus, if on the keyboard the A button is pressed the lamps of all members of the monogram entering into that letter shine out simultaneously, while all other lamps upon the display frame remain dead. And so on for every letter. The observer has only to follow the letters as they flash out one after another to spell out the words of the message. It will be seen that this is a sort of visual telegraph, and that it may be made to talk in almost any language spoken by men. It is also serviceable for cipher writing according to any prearranged code. The monogram frame is five feet high by three and one-half feet wide and is equipped with 16-candle power lamps. Signals flashed from this frame are visable to the naked eye for distances of from one to three miles, depending on the weather. With a glass the signals may be easily read up to ten miles. Some frames are made much larger and can be seen further.

The Size of Siberia.

A graphic idea of the immense size of Siberia may be gleaned from the following comparison: All of the states, kingdoms, municipalities, empires, etc., of Europe, except Russia, and all of the United States, including Alaska, could be placed side by side in Siberia and yet but little more than cover that immense territory.

Would Not Be Sold.

A dog owned by a man in Addison, Mich., walked back home a distance of forty miles recently. Its owner gave it away, but the dog didn't like its new home, and quietly trotted back to its old kennel.

LIFE INSURANCE A SACRED TRUST.

Responsibilities of Officers and Directors.

Evidently President Kingsley of the New York Life Insurance company has learned the great lesson of the times with respect to the responsibility and duty of directors of corporations. Speaking to the new board of trustees, on the occasion of his election to the presidency, he emphasized the fact that "life insurance is more than a private business, that life insurance trustees are public servants, charged at once with the obligations of public service and with the responsibilities that attach to a going business which at the same time must be administered as a trust."

He also realizes that similar responsibilities rest upon the officers of the company. "I understand," he says, "your anxiety in selecting the men who are day by day to carry this burden for you, who are to discharge this trust in your behalf, who are to administer for the benefit of the people involved the multitudinous and exacting details to which it is impossible for you to give personal attention. My long connection with the New York Life—covering nearly twenty years—my service in about every branch of the company's working organization, gives me, as I believe, a profound appreciation, not merely of the heavy burden you have placed on my shoulders, but of the standards of efficiency, the standards of faith, the standards of integrity, which must be maintained at all times by the man who serves you and the policyholders in this high office."

Best of all, perhaps, he feels that words are cheap, and that the public will be satisfied with nothing short of performance. "My thanks, therefore," he continues, "for an honor which outranks any distinction within the reach of my ambition, cannot be expressed in words; they must be read out of the record I make day by day."

Implying Conceit.

Many years ago Daniel Lord, Jr., as he always signed his name, then one of the shining lights of the bar in New York, was arguing a case before the court of appeals, when a country lawyer asked Charles O'Connor the name of the gentleman who was speaking.

"That," said Mr. O'Connor, who was rather nettled at something Lord had said, "that, sir, is Daniel Lord, Jr., and he puts the 'junior' after his name so that he may not be mistaken for the Almighty."

The Kaiser's Precautions.

Thirty thousand metres of wire netting are to be erected on the course for the Kaiserprais contest wherever necessary at dangerous corners and in villages.

The kaiser himself, accompanied by Prince Henry of Prussia, made the round of the course recently with a view to examining the arrangements for the building of bridges, to the number of thirty, for pedestrians. The route is to be subdivided into twelve sections, and a public safety commission will be in charge of each.

It is intended that the course shall be closed three days before the race in order that it may be treated throughout with a dust laying preparation.

Car Kills Big Badger.

The pugnacity of the badger is of world wide renown, but he would scarcely be expected to assail a street car; yet the crew of Pacific Electric Car No. 393 assert that one claiming residence on Rancho Santa Anita disputed the right of way last evening.

About 9 o'clock p. m., as the car swung around the curve in the vineyard west of Arcadia, Motorman Shearer saw a large animal between the rails. Repeated shrieks of the whistle had no other effect than to cause him to rear and bare his teeth in defiance. Then he was a dead badger. He weighed eighty pounds, and his hide measures three and one-half feet in length by two in width. His immense claws are four inches long. He is by far the largest of the species ever killed in this vicinity.

COULDN'T KEEP IT.

Kept It Hid from the Children.

"We cannot keep Grape-Nuts food in the house. It goes so fast I have to hide it, because the children love it so. It is just the food I have been looking for ever so long; something that I do not have to stop to prepare and still is nourishing."

Grape-Nuts is the most scientifically made food on the market. It is perfectly and completely cooked at the factory and can be served at an instant's notice, either with rich cold cream, or with hot milk if a hot dish is desired. When milk or water is used, a little sugar should be added, but when cold cream is used alone the natural grape-sugar, which can be seen glistening on the granules, is sufficiently sweet to satisfy the palate. This grape-sugar is not poured over the granules, as some people think, but exudes from the granules in the process of manufacture, when the starch of the grains is changed from starch to grape-sugar by the process of manufacture. This, in effect, is the first act of digestion; therefore, Grape-Nuts food is pre-digested and is most perfectly assimilated by the very weakest stomach. "There's a Reason."

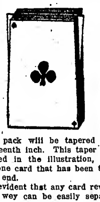
SIMPLE TRICK WITH CARDS.

Will Mystify Ordinary Spectators, and Is Not Easy to Detect.

One of the simplest tricks to perform, but one not easily detected, can be executed by using a tapered deck of cards as shown in the figure. A cheap deck of cards is evened up square, fastened in a vise and planed along the edge in such a manner that all the pack will be tapered about one-sixteenth inch. This taper is exaggerated in the illustration, which shows one card that has been turned end for end.

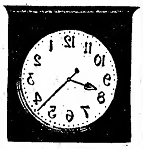


It is evident that any card reversed in this way can be easily separated from the other cards in the pack, which makes it possible to perform the following trick: The performer spreads the cards out, fan like, and asks an observer to withdraw a card, which is then replaced in any part of the pack. After thoroughly shuffling the cards the performer then holds the deck in both hands behind his back and pronouncing a few magic words produces the card selected in one hand and the rest of the pack in the other. This is accomplished by simply turning the deck end for end while the observer is looking at his card, thus bringing the wide end of the selected card at the narrow end of the pack when it is replaced. The hands are placed behind the back for a double purpose, as the feat then seems more marvelous and the observers are not allowed to see how it is done.

FOR THE BARBER SHOP.

Inverted Clock a Boon to the "Man in the Chair."

Every barber shop has a clock which is invariably placed on the wall opposite the big mirror which faces the customer in the chair. The clock face is reversed as seen in the mirror, and it is a severe strain on the eyes to figure out the correct time. A jeweler in Glendine, Mont., has now invented a sane clock for barber shops. The figures on the dial are reversed, and the hands move just opposite to those of ordinary clocks. The result is the reflection in the glass is so "you can understand it." To demonstrate, hold this page in front of a mirror and read the time of the clock in the illustration.



OTTER CAME HOME AGAIN.

Pet Returned to Owner After Brief Hour of Freedom.

A curious instance of animal instinct and attachment in an otter is related by a Cork correspondent of the London Field. A few months ago in that city a man caught a live otter. Bringing the animal home, after some time, he succeeded in taming it, and trained it to fish.

One day he took it to the river for a swim, and while there it killed some fish, but succeeded in getting off the strap to which it was attached. After waiting some hours, in a vain endeavor to induce the animal to leave the water the owner gave up in despair and returned home.

Late that night, while in bed, this man heard a scratching at the front door of his cottage, and to his great surprise, when he opened the door, in walked the otter, which he then secure. The most remarkable feature of this story is the fact that this man lived about a mile from the river and that his cottage was one in a row.

Odd Place for Bird's Nest.

A thrush has built her nest at the back of the neck of the sculptured angel on the memorial to William Thimoe Kine, the author, in St. Margaret's churchyard, Keddington, near Louth.

The memorial is protected by a wire cage, through which the bird managed to find its way. The cage also protects the birds, for no boys can possibly get at the nest, which now shelters the mother bird and five little thrushes.—London Evening Standard.

"Flat" Life Among the Birds.

A curious friendship has been observed here. A blackbird built her nest in a quiet covert in this neighborhood, and after laying four eggs she was joined by a thrush, who also laid four eggs in the same nest. Owing to the sheltered nature of their retreat, the hospitable blackbird and her friend hatched the double brood in peace.

This appears to be the earliest recorded instance of the maisonette in ornithology.—The Scotsman.

SPOILS OF AN OLD CASKET.

Carefully Hidden Dowry of a Mohammedan Bride.

A true fairy tale concerning an Oriental casket sold by an antiquary to a Parisian amateur is related by the correspondent of the London Telegraph.

The casket is of beautiful artistic workmanship of olive wood, with incrustations. It was evidently a wedding present, such as it is the custom to give a bride in Mohammedan countries.

There is a perfume of rose leaves, a delicate far away fragrance of the distant East, when the cover is lifted. The antiquary bought it at a general sale long ago, and offered it to purchasers amid Louis XVI. clocks, old ribbons and out-of-date decorations. A lover of quaint antiques, M. Maurice saw the casket and bought it.

As it had been knocked about a good deal in its long journey it stood in need of repairs, and M. Maurice gave it to an expert workman to restore. The workman tapped it and was surprised to notice a metallic sound inside. He found that the jewel box had a double bottom, and when opened there were rows of old and odd coins, which glittered faintly, but enough to show at once that they were of pure gold.

A numismatist declared they were gold sequins and worth about 160 pounds. It was a sum which to a young bride a hundred or two hundred years ago represented perhaps a fortune. The workman informed M. Maurice, and the latter told the antiquary. As they were all three honest men, each wished that the other claim the bride's treasure.

They referred the matter to the police commissary, who gave a decision worthy of Solomon. He divided the gold coins into two equal piles and told M. Maurice and the antiquary to take each a pile and then left it to their combined generosity to reward the honest workman. This they did, each giving him a few of the gold sequins, so that all had about an even share in the treasure of the bride.

THERE IS A REASON.

The Medical Times Explains Why Doctors Oppose Patent Medicines.

The Medical Times for April in a moment of frankness explains the whole opposition of physicians to "patent" medicines which are taken without a prescription, in the following words:

"We will hardly repeat here the specific statement to the effect that in one year $62,000,000 has been expended on patent medicines in the United States. Enough to give every practitioner in the country a yearly income of $2,000. In the face of such facts as these, all talk of love of humanity, altruism, self-abnegation and the like becomes cheap and nauseating. It appears to us that such buncombe should give place to homely, common sense."

Reliable authority states that the gross amount of the "patent" medicine business is about $40,000,000 instead of $62,000,000 but taking the Medical Times' figures as correct they represent an outlay of considerably less than $1 per capita for home medication. The cost of doctors' fees exclusive of medicines except such as are dispensed for the same period, probably was approximately $230,000,000. This is reached by allowing an average income of $2,000 to each of the 115,000 physicians in the United States. Even allowing that a gross business of $62,000,000 is to be divided between 115,000 physicians the income of each would not be increased more than $540.

Innocent Joys of Youth.

"Gracious, Fanny!" exclaimed a mother to her little daughter, "why are you shouting like that? Why can't you be quiet like your brother?"

"He's got to be quiet," replied Fanny. "He's playing papa coming home late."

"And who are you playing?"

"Oh, I'm playing you."

WHERE DOCTORS FAILED.

An Interesting Case from Salem, the Capital of Oregon.

F. A. Sutton, R. F. D. No. 4, Salem, Oregon, says: "Acute attacks of kidney disease and rheumatism laid me up off and on for ten years. Awful pains started from the kidneys and coursed down through my limbs. I sought the best medical treatment but in vain, and when I began using Doan's Kidney Pills I was walking with two canes and suffering continual pains, headaches and sleepless nights. I improved quickly and after taking three boxes felt better than I had for 15 years. The effects have been lasting."

The committee of the Roman senate found Cincinnatus plowing with a team of flea bitten mules.

Well pleased with his witticism he tied the mules to the fence and went back to town with the committee.

SHEEP WOMAN'S LUCK

Kearney, Neb.—And there came a time when we wanted to go into the sheep business. "We" are a woman. An early English writer says: "A househnnd cnnnot thryve by his corne without cattell; nor by his cattell without corne. Sheep in my opinion is the most profitable cattell any man can have."

We procured a flock at considerable cost; bought them of an old sheep trader who knew his business if we didn't ours. He topped the market when he sold us his half fat lambs, nice, big lambs—the yearling kind—at lamb prices. His bunch of old ewes changed hands at a notch lower.

Do not buy old ewes. They have a way of passing into the mysterious beyond in such a rapid manner that it shocks one! We think he succeeded in unloading all of the original flock, those recorded in early history, on our hands. Anyway, they had come down through the dingy past. In that we feel we have benefited humanity. No one will get any more of that generation. The evening sun of their life was set when we closed our gates upon them. The aged creatures were turned into a paddock by themselves. Some hobbled on three legs, some hobbled on four. A collection of the antique. They were put on two pounds of corn per day, per feed, per sheep.

Putting in the Night with His Head Between Two Rails.

Thus we succeeded in considerably diminishing their number; about two-thirds. We read in a sheep paper that old ewes needed succulent food. Straightway their rack was filled with nice green succulent alfalfa, newly cut, still with with the glistening dew. There must have been something wrong with the dew. The few who survived to tell the tale are now taking Epsom salts.

In the bunch were some breeding ewes, natives—blue bloods—so saith the sheep breeder, and inveigled us into paying a fancy price for the fancy (?) stock. Along comes a sheep man and pours forth his wisdom: "Now you are new at the business. Now let them ewes out and give 'em exercise. Let 'em on pasture a couple of hours," quoth he. A short distance lay our field of alfalfa, tender and sweet. At the end of the allotted time what few responded to our frantic efforts to get them off that field, soon became a dead issue, representing hundreds of dollars.

Then there was the thoroughbred buck. "Don't buy grade bucks. Buy this one, only $35," cried the sheep trader. We thought this sheep should have horns, but the more we became acquainted with him, however, the more we thanked our stars he was not a horned beast. If he couldn't go over the fence he would go under; if not over nor under he would go through it and manage to hang by one or more of his legs until assistance came. After putting in the night with his head between two fence rails we were able the next morning to chronicle the passing of our thoroughbred.

This sheep trader also said with a great flourish: "They will keep your lawn down." They did. They also downed my young orchard and every green thing upon the place. Their omnivorous appetite soon made our spacious lawn, to which we had devoted ourselves regardless of labor or expense and excelled in landscape gardening, look like golf links; our orchard like a forest of bean poles. Nor have we yet settled with our neighbor for the wanton destruction of his celery patch, nor a rose garden devoured by them belonging to a fussy old maid near by.

When they sickened and died we sent for the sheep man. He looked wise, threw up his hands and vouchsafed this information. "When a sheep gets sick ye can't do a thing with 'em. They just up and die. When a sheep dies he dies quick." This surprised and startled us. We mean it did at first. It doesn't now. We are a sheep man now ourselves. Feeding at the rack full of life and vigor one moment with promises of so much per pound at the stock yards, you may in ten more minutes send for the sheep undertaker to carry them off at so much the job. Life is not all sunshine, neither is the sheep business.

We bunched up the remainder of our several yards, made a carload lot and consigned them to a local market. By getting top prices the salesman succeeded in settling with the transportation company and paying his own commission from the receipts. We felt grateful to him for that.

There is money in sheep, so saith the sheep feeder. This may be true. We are not here to deny it. Someone made money turning over those sheep. But it wasn't us. It was the other fellow.

However, we have acquired the name of being a good sheep man, and as no one but the bats and owls know of our misfortunes we blandly smile and rest our laurels so richly won. To be counted a good sheep man is worth its weight in gold.

In closing we might say we have a sheep ranch for sale, consisting of some feed troughs, a bin of corn, purchased when the market was soaring, half barrel of salt, and several head of sheep that will do well on 90 days' soft feed; that's because their teeth are gone. We would consider cash or trade for a quarter section in Kansas. CHARLOTTE WHITNEY.

HOW TO SELECT SEED POTATOES

By E. R. Bennett, Colorado Agricultural College.

When digging, hills will be found, all the tubers of which will conform to the ideal toward which the potato grower is striving. If these tubers be saved and planted, a large part though not all of them ought to produce potatoes like the seed. These should be selected again by hills and all should be discarded except potatoes from those hills which approximate the ideal type.

The longer this selection is carried on, the greater should be the proportion of tubers like the original selected type.

The usual objection to this selection, in practice, is that at digging time when the work must be done, the grower is too busy getting in the crop to take time for improvement of future crops. The selecting can be done, however, without taking a great deal of time. When the digger is running one man should follow with a basket and select the most desirable specimens of tubers from hills that conform to his ideal type of that variety. Ordinarily the machine will leave the tubers in such shape that the individual hills can be separated. In this work do not look for perfect tubers only. Select perfect tubers from hills in which all of the tubers are of good shape and of sufficient number to give a good yield even though some of them are too small for market.

With this system of selection seed potatoes ought to be secured in one day to plant at least one acre of land. These potatoes should be sacked, labeled and put in a cool place by themselves. The following spring they should be planted at one side of the field, where they can be staked off from the rest of the crop. Most growers prefer to plant potatoes that are intended for seed, late. A very rich soil is not desirable for growing seed potatoes because of the tendency to produce overgrown tubers. This may be overcome to some extent by planting more seed to the hill or planting the hills closer together. When digging time comes the same process of selection and elimination should be gone through again. In this way the improvement of type and yield may go on from year to year.

Many growers prefer green or immature seed to that which is fully developed. Experiments along this line with plants produced from seed rather than by vegetative parts have shown that immature seed tend to produce an early maturing plant, and also one that tends to produce more fruit to the amount of plant tissue but at the expense of vitality and size of plant.

This law does not necessarily hold good with the potato since the reproduction is accomplished by means of the vegetative portion of the plant. Experiments along this line with the potato have not been carried far enough to give definite results.

Wind and Soil Moisture.—The wind is a great consumer of moisture. This is because it acts as a pump in drawing the moisture out of the plants and out of the ground. The principle is the same as when the wind blows over a chimney on a windy day. The air passing over takes hold of a column of air in the chimney and pulls it along with it. The little capillary tubes in the soil are minute chimneys, and the wind passing is drawing the air out of them and with the air is drawing the aqueous vapor. It is the same with the minute pores in the leaves of plants. Through these pass the columns of vapor to mingle with the air.

Honey Wasted.—Much honey produced by flowers goes to waste, as there are not enough bees to collect it.

Faulty Statistics.

"The department of agriculture has figured out," he read from the paper, "that rats cost the people of this country $100,000,000 a year."

"John Henry," replied his wife, "I don't believe a word of it. Why, mine only cost 35 cents, some women make their own and some wear their hair fist. Huh, can't tell me!"

Mustn't Sell Bad Eggs.

Anyone selling bad eggs or keeping them for sale hereafter will be liable to a fine of $50. E. K. Slater state dairy and food commissioner, has ruled that bad eggs come under the new law prohibiting the sale of decayed or unwholesome substances as food and copies of the ruling will be sent broadcast as soon as it is formulated.

Mr. Slater has conferred with produce dealers and explained the provisions of the law. They all expressed willingness to obey it, but contended that the authorities would have to help to protect them from country dealers and producers who sell eggs and ship them knowing them to be bad. The law will be enforced against the poultry raisers as well as against the dealers.

Spoiled eggs are often mixed with chemicals and take off the odor, and used for cheap cakes but such a practice will be dangerous hereafter.

Troubles of the stomach, heart or kidneys, are merely symptoms of deeper ailment. Don't make the common error of treating the symptoms only. Symptom treatment is treating the result of your ailmentt, not the cause. Weak stomach nerves—the inside nerves—mean stomach weakness, always. And the heart, and kidneys as well have their controlling or inside nerves. Weaken these nerves and you inevitably have weak vital organs. Here is where Dr. Shoop's Restorative has made its fame. No other remedy even claims to treat the "inside nerves." Also for bloating, biliousness, bad breath or complexion, use Dr. Shoop's restorative Write me for sample and free book. Prominent Brayite Dies.

On last Tuesday, July 16th, at his home in the township of Bray, occured the death of Charles P, Swanson, of internal hemorrhage. Mr. Swanson was born in Sweden, September 4th, 1850, and came to this country in 1873. He came to this section in 1881 and took a homestead in Bray, and has been prominent in township and county affairs for the past twenty-five years. He was married in 1882 and leaves a wife and five children—three boys and two girls, to mourn his loss. At the time of his death Mr. Swanson was postmaster at Bray, and secretary of the Bray Mutual Fire Insurance company. There are few men in the county who have devoted so much of their time to the service of the public, particularly when there was little or no compensation, as did Mr. Swanson. Much of the success of the Bray Mutual was due to his efforts and his death will be a marked loss to the community. The Spectator, in company with his many friends, wishes to extend sympathy to the bereaved wife and children.—St. Hilaire Spectator.

Newspaper Consolidations.

Farribault Pilot: The consolidation of country newspapers is becoming prevalent. Two weeks sgo the LeSueur Democrat and the LeSueur County Leader, both published in LeSueur Center, and last week the Red Lake Falls COURIER and GAZETTE consolidated. The reason for consolidation and disappearance of so many country newspapers is attributable to several causes. Everything that goes to make a country newspaper has largely increased in price the last three years. The price of labor has increased twenty-five percent, paper fifty percent, type seventyfive percent, and other articles used in preparing and publishing a newsnaper correspondingly. The weeklies cannot raise the subscription nor can they raise the price of advertising space to correspond with the price of labor and material, consequently the profits of a country newspaper are so small that it does not afford the editor a decent annual salary, not to say a profit on the investment.

Holds Law Valid.

E. T. Young, attorney general of Minnesota, holds the road and bridge appropriation law, appropriating $200,000 a year for general road and bridge aid throughout the state to be a constitutional statute. His opinion on the matter was filed recently it being a lenghty explanation and admits a very slight doubt for the other side. He believes, however, that the originators of the constitution meant this section to have a broad Interpretation, otherwise all all state betterments would be materially hampered. Another matter in which an opinion was asked is the $50,000 appropriation for drainage purposes, but it is not included in the recent answer of the attorney general. If virtually the same points are involved it is expected that it will also be declared valid. The legal department, however is not a unit in the question and Mr. Young admits that there is some doubt but he thinks the weight of authorities are in favor of the law.

NATURE'S BEAUTY SPOT.

A Grand Scenic View and Resting Place for the Weary.

The following excellent senduff for Red Lake Falls was written by George W. Colburn, of Grand Forks for the Evening Times. Mr. Colburn spent a couple of days here in July and tells in a pleasing manner what impressions he gained of Red Lake Falls and surrounding country:

Red Lake Falls, Minnesota, situated at the confluence of the Clearwater and Red Lake rivers, and on the Great Northern and Northern Pacific railroads furnishes scenery almost unparalleled.

This beauty spot may be reached for 80 cents car fare from Grand Forks over the N. P. road in about two hours ride. By leaving Grand Forks at 3:15 p. m., arriving in Red Lake Falls before 6 p. m. one can spend a day pleasantly viewing the scenery where nature has done so much, and returning on the morning train, reach Grand Forks before noon.

On the trip one sees the grand curve so much resembling the switch-back at Bear Lake in the Rocky Mountains where the front part of the train may be seen from the rear car, running in an opposite direction, from the car in which one is riding

Another scene where the train runs close to the rapid running river resembles the scenery along Priest river in Idaho, so that one sees much of interest before reaching the real beauty spot where winding stone steps lead up to beautiful residences situated upon little plateaus overlooking the city and beautiful scenery for miles around.

Nature has done so much here to beautify the place that the citizens have not deemed it necessary to lay out any artificial parks, boulyards and landscape scenery, yet at a small expense this place could be made one of national interest.

An ideal location for a normal school, a sanitarium, summer cottages, conventions, picnics and social gatherings of every kind, for here the mind seems at once rested as the eyes feast upon the varied scenery—the beautiful landscapes as painted by nature.

The rapid running rivers furnish an abundant water power some of which is now utilized by two dams which run two large flour mills and furnish cheap electric light for the city—so cheap, in fact, that the electric lights may be seen shining like stars in a green back-ground all the night long.

A pulp-mill proposition is now under consideration, with good prospect of their being a paper mill erected which will give employment to a large number of persons.

Just at present real estate is very low and beautiful residences may be bought for much less than cost of the building material. This depreciation we were told was caused by the saw-mill and planing mill suspending business several years ago and further declined by the close proximity of the Soo road to the east yet the valuable water power, almost unlimited, will not long remain idle for as soon as the eastern capital learns of this wasting power, there will be no end to the rapid up-building of this beauty spot.

An Elbert Hubbard is needed here to develop industries which will increase the population and bring value to the now numerous residences and business houses.

The inexhaustible supply of fine pottery clay awaits the hand of the enterprising moulder who can make his fortune within the confines of this beauty spot.

Vegetation is early and luxuriant and large herds of cows furnish the nearby creameries with an abundance of lacteal fluid and the progressive farmer with ample funds for it is stated that the farmers received over $600,000 in a single year from the sale of cream alone

Here on the Fourth of July the writer pulled a stalk of red clover from a large field of timothy and clover, that measured twenty-seven and one half inches in length.

Though a large number of cows are kept in the vicinity of Red Lake Falls, yet this place exports a large amount of hay, each year.

Garden truck grows in profusion and potatoes are already in blossom. The market gardener would find here a prolific spot to grow his products.

Ed. L. Healy and his good wife took our party for a free ride about the city, pointing out points of interest we had not observed and to these good people we are indebted for much of the pleasure of our visit.

The citizens, generally, are hospitable and while the hotels are not elaborate, they give good, neat wholesome services at moderate prices.

Complains of Boat Service.

Thief River Press: A. D. Brown often known as "Chicken Brown" a resident of Erie on the eleven towns, and known to most of the old settlers in this city and vicinity, makes complaint of the boat service on the river. The Minneapolis Journal says of the matter:

"Farmers along the upper Red Lake river are suffering from lack of transportation facilities, according to a letter received today by Secretary of State Schmall from A. D. Brown of Erie, Red Lake county. He says all the boats on the Red Lake river have been brought up by the Beltrami lumber company and the Red Lake River Transportation company, that they have raised rates on freight from 20 to 40 cents a hundred, and on passengers from 25 cents to $1, also that they run no regular service. He says he has had freight at Thief River Falls for sixty days and cannot get it to his farm at any price. Their roads are impassable for horses. Their county attorney is also attorney for the corporations, so they cannot get relief there.

The companies do not seem to be common carriers, but Secretary Schmal will investigate to see what relief may be secured."

Much of this will be news to the residents up-river. Not only have boats been running at practically the same old rates for passengers and freight, we are told, but roads are far from impassable for teams, they are better than in years past and at ordinary times are in very fair condition.

TRIAL OF HAYWOOD

For Murder of Gov. Steunenberg.

Moyer on Stand for His Comrade.

Boise, Idaho, July 13.—William D. Haywood took the oath yesterday as a witness in his own defense, and in a lengthy narrative of his life and his work as a leader of his fellow miners, denied guilt of the murder of Frank Steunenberg and the manifold crimes charged against him by Harry Orchard.

Haywood's testimony was chiefly characterized with positive denials of allegations made against him by the prosecution. He denied that he met Orchard until some time after the Vindicator explosion; denied that he sent Orchard back to Cripple Creek to blow up the Independence station; denied participation in the Lyte Gregory murder, and denied suggesting or discussing the Steunenberg murder.

Never Gave Orchard Money.

He swore that he never gave Orchard any money at any time or place for any purpose. He declared that he never made a threat against Steunenberg, whom he said he regarded only as he did any politician who is being swayed by capitalistic influence. The direct examination had not reached the connection of Jack Simpkins and the action of the federation after Steunenberg was murdered when adjournment interrupted it.

Haywood Stands Borah's Grilling.

Boise, July 14. — William D. Haywood, charged with the murder of Frank Steunenberg, left the witness chair this afternoon. He had been under examination six hours, the time being equally divided between his own counsel and Senator Borah, who conducted the cross-examination. Haywood's testimony practically closes the case for the defense. One witness will be called to-day and his examination will take up about fifteen minutes. The state will then begin the rebuttal.

Rapid-fire Questions.

Borah's cross-examination, always rapid fire, was more than usually quick yesterday, but from first to last Haywood preserved complete self-control. At times his replies came, as quickly as the questions were flung at him. Again he would hesitate and speak slowly, with marked emphasis. Mr. Borah's manner was courteous throughout, but now and then a tinge of sarcasm appeared as he insisted on a direct answer and Haywood appeared reluctant. Haywood in turn was as courteous as the cross-examiner.

Feeling Toward Steunenberg.

Once when Senator Borah pressed Haywood as to his sentiment toward Former Governor Steunenberg, Haywood said quietly and with a smile, "I felt no different toward Steunenberg than I do towards you or any of those people."

Senator Borah looked up quickly but did not smile. He said very quietly: "Yes; I have been given to understand something of that sort," and did not pursue the subject.

Much of Haywood's testimony yesterday was a repetition in detail of what Moyer said Thursday. Haywood, however, made no effort to deny his knowledge of Orchard and his affairs or his connection with Simpkins.

Haywood Denies Crimes.

Like Moyer, Haywood said he had never heard Orchard make threats against Steunenberg. Haywood in many particulars confirmed Orchard, but where Orchard connected Haywood or the Western Federation with crime the witness was emphatic and prompt in his denials. He showed no desire to conceal the fact that Orchard had visited him at his house, or that he on different occasions had intimate conversations with Orchard. He denounced the administration of Colorado at the time of the troubles as corrupt and he extolled the Western Federation.

Sensations Are Many.

Boise, Idaho, July 16. — Sensation followed sensation quickly in the Haywood trial Saturday, when the state commenced its rebuttal evidence.

One witness confessed to participation in a labor riot, resulting in the death of two men; the record of conviction of murder in the second degress of a witness for the defense was introduced, and the proof of another having been sent to an insane asylum upon the information of his neighbors was offered, its admissibility was argued and the decision of the court will be handed down on Monday morning.

Perjury Is Charged.

A crowded court room, somewhat bored by legal commonplaces, sprang to strained attention when William Dewey, a witness in rebuttal for the state, confessed to armed participation in the destruction of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan concentrator at Wardner on April 29, 1898, when two men were killed and a mob of 1,000 men participated in a riot.

Said Davis Led Mob.

Harry Orchard commenced his series of great crimes at Wardner. He confessed to lighting one of the fuses that started the explosion, and he swore that William F. Davis, known among his fellows as "Big Bill" Davis, led the mob.

Witnesses for the defense have sworn that Orchard was not at Wardner on April 29. Davis himself has sworn to have been elsewhere and positively denied any connection with the crime.

Served Out Guns.

Dewey swore that not only did "Big Bill" accompany the mob to Wardner, but that he served out guns, rifles and ammunition to the union men gathered in the union hall at Burke before they went to Wardner, and was one of the leaders of the column that advanced on the concentrator before the work of destruction commenced.

Ten witnesses in rebuttal were examined Saturday. Most of them were called to disprove statements as to Orchard's movements.

Another Perjury Charge.

Boise, July 17. — Another warrant charging perjury against a witness who has testified for the defense in the Haywood trial was issued last evening. C. W. Aller, formerly a telegraph operator and ticket agent at the Florence & Cripple Creek railroad at Cripple Creek, Colo., is charged with the offense by the prosecuting attorney of Ada county.

Orchard Again Testifies.

Harry Orchard reappeared on the stand was asked a few questions as to his acquaintance with some of the witnesses for the defense who have testified as to his movements. On cross-examination he admitted that his uncle, Peter McKinley, committed suicide by hanging thirty or fourteen years ago. Counsel for the defense asked Orchard if this uncle was not insane before he killed himself, and also tried to show by the witness that his maternal grandfather was insane, his monomania being imaginary crimes committed a long time ago in Ireland. Orchard denied all knowledge of the grandfather, but admitted that his uncle was emented.

Make Witness Out a Liar.

The entire afternoon was taken up with the examination of witnesses who contradicted the evidence given by C. W. Aller, who testified for the defense in support of a charge of conspiracy against the Western Federation of Miners, in which it is alleged the mine owners' organization, the Citizens' alliance and the Pinkerton detective agency were concerned. Aller swore that he saw Orchard and D. C. Scott together at the depot of the Florence & Cripple Creek railway on a Sunday about three weeks prior to the explosion at the Independence depot on the 6th day of June, 1904. Scott yesterday afternoon swore that he was not in Cripple Creek at the time and a number of witnesses corroborated this. As a result of this rebuttal testimony information was sworn out after court adjourned, charging Aller with perjury.

Rebut Evidence of the Defense.

Boise, Idaho, July 18.—In the last stages of the case against William D. Haywood the prosecution put six witnesses on the stand yesterday to rebut the evidence of the defense. Three testified to conditions in the Coeur d'Alenes in 1899 and three to the situation in Colorado during the strike period of 1903 and 1904. The important witnesses of the day were those to contradict the showing made by witnesses for the defense that there was no reason for calling out the militia of Colorado other than a desire on the part of the mine owners to drive members of the Western Federation of Miners from the mining district. One witness flatly contradicted the evidence introduced by the defense to show that the explosion at the Vindicator mine was due to an accident.

Perjury Charge Heard.

While the trial was going on in the district court before Judge Wood an interesting offshoot of the case was being held in the small room used as a court by Justice of the Peace Savage. C. W. Aller, the depot agent, who was arrested charged with perjury, was brought before the magistrate for a preliminary hearing.

The principal witness in the perjury hearing was Orchard himself. He went over his testimony with D. C. Shott, the railroad agent, who Aller swore interviewed Orchard in Cripple Creek two or three weeks before the explosion at the Independence depot, on June 6, 1904.

Orchard Sticks to Story.

Orchard was closely cross-questioned, but no amount of questioning brought out any material change in the original story. A number of other witnesses were examined, the case taking up most of the day. A motion to dismiss will be argued to-day. Aller was released on $2,500 bond.

LOCKJAW FATAL TO TWO.

Mule's Kick and Splinter Cause Two Deaths in Iowa.

Albia, Iowa, July 14. — Two deaths from lockjaw occurred here yesterday. Albert Ann was kicked on the end of a finger by a mule several days ago. Blood poison followed amputation and he died in terrible agony.

Mrs. George Williams ran a splinter into her finger several weeks ago. Tetanus resulted in spite of amputation, causing death.

Governor's Salute Fatal.

Port Townsend, Wash., July 13. — One man killed and two severely burned marred the reception to Gov. Mead and staff at Fort Worden yesterday.

As a governor's salute of seventeen guns was fired from a battery one gun became overheated and as the charge was driven home it exploded. Private Tobassen, Sixty-second company, received the full force of the charge, which blew off one arm and badly mashed his hand.

DEFENSE RESTS IN HAYWOOD CASE

DAY OF ARGUMENT ON THE ADMISSIBILITY OF CERTAIN EVIDENCE.

CLOSING ARGUMENTS TO-DAY

THE DEFENSE ANNOUNCE THAT THEY HAVE NO FURTHER WITNESSES.

Boise, Idaho, July 20.—A day of arguments on the admissibility of points of evidence followed the announcement from the defense that they had no further witnesses to offer in behalf of Haywood. The jury was not brought into court, Judge Wood having been informed by counsel of their decision to rest without offer of surrebuttal. Clarence Darrow spoke for an hour and a half in the morning session. Senator Borah replied in the afternoon and was followed by E. F. Richardson. Judge Wood will probably announce his decision this morning.

To Exclude Evidence.

The point argued was the proposition to exclude consideration of evidence offered by the defense to show by proof of the deportation of miners and the employment of detectives in Cripple Creek district of Colorado that a conspiracy was formed among the mine owners and the citizens of the district to prevent the employment of members of the Western Federation of Miners. The position taken by the Haywood defense was that Harry Orchard was employed by the Mine Owners' association through detectives to commit crimes that were charged to the federation; that public opinion was aroused against the union miners, and '' t, if the Colorado evidence for the state was admitted the defense had the right to show a counter conspiracy.

State Replies.

The reply of the state was that the defense had failed legally to connect their case in any of the particulars stated, and therefore their evidence merely confused the issue.

J. M. Hawley will open the argument for the state this morning. It is expected that he will take the entire day. Mr. Richardson, for the defense, will speak Saturday.

THE STATE DAY BY DAY

News of Interest.

BETTER BASIS FOR TAXATION.

Commission Aims to Get Facts on Values.

The state tax commission in the lost few days has sent out two importnnt communications to the county auditors of the state. One of these calls for the name of every persooal property taxpayer in the state, together with the items on which he pays. The commission some weeks ago sent men through the state to gather from the records a list of the taxes on realty, together with prices on real estate transfers in each taxing district during the last year. Compliance with this request to the auditors will put the commission in possession of information of all taxes paid to the state and upon what valuation.

Another letter asks of the county auditor samples of all forms, blanks and pages from the records in use in their office. The commission will compare these forms, try to simply them and to establish a system of uniform blanks for the use of county auditors. This will reduce the work of obtaining information to a minimum, and at the same time standardize the work of the auditors.

The commission recently issued another letter, addressed to the county boards of equalization, who on July 15 will have in their possession the returns from the assessors and town boards of review. The tax commission extends greetings and urges the boards to use discretion in their difficult task so that the amount of personal property placed on the assessment rolls will compare in some degree with the wealth and standing of the people in the community.

The work of compiling personal property tax lists entalls much effort on the part of the county auditors, and as partial compensation the commission will pay at the rate of 75 cents a hundred names. These names will be entered in special blank books, with room for forty names in a book, with entries under each of the divisions of the thirty items which may be assessed in this state. The commission will send these blanks to the auditors so that all records in the state office may be uniform. It is anticipated that fully 200,000 names will be reported. The commission has asked that the work be completed by Aug. 20.

The field agents of the commission are now at work, preparing a similar list of the realty owners of the state. Reports on the value of the mines are coming in rapidly and the commission expects soon to have ample information upon which to base a scientific scheme for the state wide equalization of taxes. From the report it will be noted where the tax is at widest variance with the reported assessment or where the assessment varies from the report of sales of real estate in that district the past year. By these and similar comparisons the commissioners will be able to arrive at figures which will mean a fairer taxation for all property in the state.

They have requested the reports from mines to be in by next Monday. Letters were sent in June to every mine or holder of a mineral lease, asking information concerning the amount of property, estimated tonnage at shipping mines, classification and physical characteristics of ore bodies, operating cost, value of structures and equipment, yearly shipments and receipts aod the amouut of ore in stock. These reports will enablo the commissioa to compare the taxes of various propertiea with the value of their output.

Miss Emma Hickman, who received her training in the Wisconsin state reference library, has been ploced by the commission in charge of the reference library which the commission is collecting. This library will include books on all phases of taxation and be accessible to the legislators and public.

Cosgrove of the Minnesota State Fair association has completed the compilation of the entry list of horses nominated for eight of the great races to be held at the state fair track next September during fair week. The entries closed on July 1. Six more races will close on Aug. 15, making the list of fourteen great races complete.

The fair officials are especially pleased with the quality of horses entered for this year's racing. Some of the greatest horsemen in the country have made entries and will bold the ribbons over the backs of some of the best trotters and pacers now on tbe American track. Ed Geera, Charlie Dean, John Laabs, Dick McMahon and men of that caliber will be at the state fair this year.

The fastest class of the races announced is the 2:08 pace, which has fifteen entries, among them the great Castlewood. The $5,000 2:13 pace for St. Paul day drew almost exsctly the same number of entries as last year—twenty-nine—aod has a bunch of horses lined up which will moke the greatest rnce ever seen on the state fafr grounds. Tbe 2:21 trot for $5,000 has fewer entries, but tbey are very select.

For the colt racc, the 2:45 trot, the mansgemeot is pleaaed with the largest list of entries ever made in tbe class. Some of tbe best stables in tbs country are represented on tha list

GOOD PRICES FOR STATE LANDS.

Total of 70,000 Acres Disposed of at Auction.

A series of eigbteen nuction sales of stote lands has just been closed by the state auditor. About 70,000 acres were sold, from which the state will receive about $550,000, and of this amount $75,000 was taken in on the first payments on the land sold. Tbe averoge price received for the laod was $7.50, which is about ths same as the average lsst yesr.

The state nuditor ssid that in many of the places visited during the sales it was found that quite a number of people from other states had been attracted to the state by the extensive advertising which the stnte hss done, and that tbey purchased improved farms as a result of their investigations. In one county he was told that about 10,000 acres bad changed hands withiu two weeks of tbe holding of the state sale tbere, which was believed to be due largely to the advertising which had attracted the attention of the people io other states to the advantages in Minnesotn farming communities. There were also n number of non-resident bidders at ths state sales just concluded aod about fifty of the sales were made to people from other states, iocluding Wisconsin, Iowa, Illinois, North and South Dakota.

The state has threc purposes in view in holding these auction sales of state lands. The first is to sell the lands for thc benefit of tbe school fund and the settlement of tha districts in which the lsnd is located. Another purpose is to advertise the state throughout the country aa nn agricultural state, as well as to call attention to the general resources of the statc and get people from outside to come here and investigate. Tbe third purpose is to make the people of the state realize what is here. In several counties there was discovered a restless feeling nmong some of tbe farmers duc to their reading of the advantages in other places and in such places the auditor made it n point to advise them to hold to tbeir Minnesota farms, which have mada them rich, and if they were impressed with the promises of some otber placa to spend a little money on n tour of investigation before they cut loosa from the Minnesota farms. If they did so he felt sure they would come back to their old farms to stay.

The last of the sales were held at Pine City, Pine county. Deputy Auditor C. S. Brown conducted this sale. The total sales will reach over 70,000 acres. St. Louis county heads the list in the number of acres sold, with 8,800, and Aitkin comes next, with 8,600. The lowest record was made in Crow Wing county, where 800 acres were disposed of.

The sales by counties were aa follows: St. Louis, 8,800; Itasca, 5,400; Carlton, 3,200; Aitkin, 8,600; Clearwater, 3,200; Crow Wing, 800; Beltrami, 3,900; Cass, 3,200; Hubbard, 3,300; Wadena, 1,000; Todd, 2,520; Kittson, 4,900; Marshall, 5,800; Roseau, 5,500; Red Lake, 2,480; Becker, 4,080.

INSECTS KILL POULTRY.

Gnat Pests Are Doing Damage Near St. Peter.

Buffalo gnats, tbe "no-see-'em-fly" of tha Indian, nra killing hundreds of chickens in St. Peter and immediate vicinity. The pests work their way up under the feathers of the fowl's neck and hy sucking its blood csuss death. So numerous are the insects and so ravenous do they become that chickens will not leave tbeir coops to eat or drink, and poultry fanciers sny they already have encountered heavy losses.

This is the most serious aspect of an insect plague that is making itself manifest throughout tbat part of the statc. The gnats, which arc scarcely larger than the head of a pin, breed by countless millions in the flooded lands along tbe Minnesota river and swarm everywbere. Along tbe streets, and particularly under shade trees, there are clouds of the diminutive flies, and tbey are so annoying that many have adopted a beaddress of mosquito bar that they may obtain comfort

Cattle and horses may be made immune from the bites of the insects by protecting tbeir ears and nostrils, hut the poultry growers have been unable to devise a way to cope with tbe pests.

If Supt. Allen of the Red Lake Indian reservotion has his wsy, 300,000,000 feet of standing timber on the peninsula between the upper and the lower lake will be placed on tbe market. ISN'T ALARMED BY BUG.

State Entomologist Doesn't Anticipate Serious Damage.

State Entomologist Washburn has made tbc following statement:

"Altbough we have found the genuine Soutbern green bug in various localities in Minnesota, wheat appears thoroughly well along and unless unfavorable weather conditions prevail from now on we do not anticipate serious injury. At present the Nortbern native form is much more abundant than tbe Southern form."

The farmers bave been watching with deep interest and increasing alarm the movements of the green bug. Opinions are widely different, some farmers claiming that the damage will not be noticeable, while others assert that a binder will not run in the vicinity of Roaemount this year. Careful consideration of the available evidence results in the opinion tbat tbere is but little damage done as yet, and though the bugs csn be found in every field, they do not appear in vaat numbers in any one place. Tbose who bave made a close study of tbe buga since their arrival there say tbat it takes only three hours from the time the egg la laid until the young bug is hatched and able to make his own living.

WESTERN MEN IN NEW YORK.

Brains of Mountain and Prairie in Demand in ths Financial Center.

Ever sincs the early days, whan D. O. Mills, J. B. Haggin and James R. Keene "emigrated" from California to New York, the metropolis has been drawing largsly on the west and south for its supply of "men who do things." Theodore P. TALES OF A PHOTOGRAPHER.

Strange Requests Made of Him by All Sorts of People.

Portrait taking is not so monotonous and uninterssting a calling as one would suppose. In ths coursa of a day a photographer meets with unusual advsntures and lsarns remarkable stories about people.

Recently a well-known photographer in a larga city was visited by a lady who asked him to photograph mors than 200 miles. Thess wsra addressed to ths lady by a man and wers of a very ardent nature.

After sha had aecured pictures she purchssed the plates and amashed them. It ia preaumed tha woman was offered a sum for tha return of tba lettera, but wlahed to retain hsr hold on ths man besidea getting tha money.

On another occasion a photographar was summoned by a prominent aociety man, who directed him to take a pictura of a man, whom hs described, as he was leaving a houss. Ths photographsr concealed himself near ths door nnd snapped the man. He later saw tha picture in a newspspar as that of a man who figured in a famous divorcs suit.

Somstimss photographers ars callsd upon to tsks the pictures of two friends meeting nfter a long absencs. Many can tsll of taking picturea of desd pets for broksn-hearted housewomen. A photographer racently took a picture of a dog laid out in a shroud in n little coffin.

In London a photographsr was called to the house of a wealtby man, whnm ha found drsssed in ths costume of King Lear. He posed and ordeerd several pictures to b esent to friends. Late rths photogrnphar learned the mnn had committed suicide.

"Yas. A frisnd of mine took a cold, not half so bsd as yours, lsst wsek, and in thres days hs was dead."

"My stars!"

"Fact. The doctor said my friend might have pulled through if he hadn't worried so much. Taks my advice and try not to think about it."

A SMALL SECRET.

Couldn't Undsrstand the Taste of His Custnmsrs.

Two men wers discussing the varioua food products now baing supplisd in auch variety and abundancs.

One, a grocsr, said, "I frsquently try a psckage or so of any certain article before offering it to my trade, and in that way snmetimes form a different idea than my customsrs have.

"For instancs, I thought I would try some Postum Food Coffee, to see what reason there was for such a call for it. At breakfast I didn't like it and suppsr proved the same, so I naturally concluded that my taste was different from that of the customsrs who bnught it right along.

"A day or two after, I waited on a lady who was buying a 25c package and told her I couldn't understand how one could fancy the taste of Postum.

"'I know just what is the mattsr,' she said, 'you put the coffse boiler on ths stova for just fiftaen minutes, and ten minutss of that tims it simmsred, and perhaps fiva minutes it boiled; nnw if you will have it lsft to boil full fiftean minutes after it commsnces to boil, you will find a delicious Java-like heverage, rich in food value of glutsn nnd phosphates, so choice that you will nevar abandon it, particularly whan you see tha great gain in health.' Well, I took another trial and aure enough I joinsd ths Postum army for good, and life seams worth living sinca I hava gottsn rid of my old time stomach and kidnay troubles."

Postum is no sort of medicine, but pure liquid fnnd, and this, together with a relisf from coffse workad the ohange. "There's a Reason."

ELKS' PARADE IN PHILADELPHIA ATTENDED BY WHOLESALE PROSTRATIONS.

Philadelphia, July 20.—The parade of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks yesterday was marked during its progress by the prostration from heat of a number of persons, estimated by the police at 2,000. Never has there been such a wholesale prostration of people in the city. For six hours the police, ambulance surgeons and the Red Cross nurses were kept on the run looking after persons who collapsed under the scorching rays of the sun, and largely because of their excellent service but one case resulted fatally. James Rowley, aged forty-four years, of this city, died in a hospital after being stricken in the street. The other stricken persons are sold to be in good condition, with no prospect of fatal results.

The paraders traversed upwards of nine miles, yet few of those overcome by heat were in the line of march. Those who succumbed were among the spectators jammed along the street in a solid mass from one end of the line to the other.

Only the war correspondents of the yellow press seem to be worrying about a war with Japan.

The St. Hilaire Spectator is justly proud of the fact that its town has the best creamery in Minnesota. A good creamery is a blessing forever.

Fairbanks is in trouble with the prohibitionists on the cocktail question. Charles had much better stand by the old reliable buttermilk. There would have been less controversy, and controversy is not in his line.

Attorney General Yoong has decided that the $400,000 appropriation for roads and bridges is legal and Auditor Iverson will pay the bills on demand from the county commissioners. Red Lake county gets about $6,000 from the "pork barrel."

Thos. D. O'Brien, insurance commissioner, has tendered his resignation to take effect August 1, and will form a law partnership with Royal A. Stone, formerly assistant general. John A. Hartigan, the present actuary of the department, has been appointed to succeed Mr. O'Brien.

It is claimed that the Norsemen sailed over the Red River country years before the discovery of America by Columbus and an anchor purported to be from an ancient Norse ship found embedded in the clay near Crookston is pointed to as evidence; but the Alexandria News is of the opinion that the Norse invasion on the Red River is of a more recent date.

JOHNSON'S RISING STAR.

There are plenty of people not ordinarily superstitious who believe that Fate controls the destiny of a public man, and time and again we have heard the belief expressed that the nomination of Governor Johnson for the presidency is "on the cards", and that no power on earth can prevent it. As to his election—well that is a different matter. But if Johnson cannot be elected, no Democrat can. Johnson can carry all the states that any other Democrat can carry, and he has a little reserve force all his own. The states comprising the Lake Superior group are ordinarily conceded to the Republicans, but with Johnson as a candidate some new alignments would result. Minnesota, for instance, would be almost certain to go for its favorite son, and the chances in Wisconsin, North and South Dakota and Montana would be in his favor. Of course, it would not be safe to guess on the outcome until it is known what the Republicans will do. If Roosevelt will recant and take the nomination it is generally conceded that he would be elected. The people like the Roosevelt policy—they believe that he is honest and is giving "a square deal." But with Fairbanks, Knox, Foraker, Cannon, or any other reactionary as the Republican candidate, Johnson would have easy sailing. The statutes of Taft is problematical. Though he seems to have the favor and support of Roosevelt, there is a grave question whether he is sufficiently progressive and radical to fill the bill.

Johnson is in much the same favor as Cleveland in 1884. His rise to national prominence has been along similar lines. He has twice been elected governor of sovereign state in the face of a tremendous political odds. He is not a representative of any clique or faction, and, unlike Bryan, has not been in the national limelight long enough to create animosities. He is not regarded as a "fanatic" and yet in his splendid career has shown the backbone to take a corporation by the throat whenever the interest of the people demanded.

Just now Governor Johnson may be regarded as a likely candidate of the Democracy, and there is no telling but that conditions next year may be most favorable for his election.

A rather amusing story is being told of a man who went into a hardware store and wished to purchase an ax. Being shown the article and informed that the price was $1.15 he said, "Why, I can get the same kind of an ax from a Chicago retail mail order concern for ninety cents." "Very well," said the dealer, "I will give it to you for the same price provided you will do the same with me as you would do with them." "All right", replied the customer, as he handed over a dollar, the dealer giving back ten cents in change. "Now," said the dealer "I want twenty-five cents more to pay express charges," which the purchaser gave him. "How much did the ax cost you?" "$1.15" answered the man. "Very well. Now give me five cents more for money order fees and postage," which the purchaser had to hand over. "Now, how much did your ax cost you?" "$1.20," said the customer. "Not so cheap after all" said the dealer, whereupon he picked up the ax, tossed it back on the shelf, and told the customer to call for it in ten days, as that would be as soon as he could get it if he ordered it from the retail catalogue house.

I will mail you free, to prove merit, a sample of my Dr. Shoop's Restorative, and my book on either Dyspepsia, The Heart or The Kidneys. Troubles of the stomach, heart or kidneys, are merely symptoms of deeper ailment. Don't make the common error of treating the symptoms only. Symptom treatment is treating the result of your ailmentt, not the cause. Weak stomach nerves—the inside nerves—mean stomach weakness, always. And the heart, and kidneys as well have their controlling or inside nerves. Weaken these nerves and you inevitably have weak vital organs. Here is where Dr. Shoop's Restorative has made its fame. No other remedy even claims to treat the "inside nerves." Also for bloating, biliousness, bad breath or complexion, use Dr. Shoop's restorative. Write me for sample and free book. Dr Shoop, Racine, Wis. The Restorative is sold by all dealers.

A bad hail storm struck sections of Polk county near Gentilly Tuesday afternoon, and for nearly half an hour hail stones as large as eggs fell in sufficient quantity to cover the ground. Garden truck and corn was damaged to some extent, but the farmers there are congratulating themselves that it was no worse.

The Baronm & Bailey circus at Crookston Tuesday attracted a good sized crowd from here and a number of rigs were put in commission to convey the people down to "see the elephant." The U. S. envelope agency is located at Dayton, O., and special request envelops are now shipped by freight in carload lots to the distributing cities, Chicago being the distributing point for postoffices in this section. Because of freight shipments users of the special request envelopes must allow from one to two weeks longer than heretofore for delivery and place their orders sufficiently early to insure delivery before their supply is exhausted.

Windom Citizen: The Gazette and Courier at Red Lake Falls have done a sensible thing and consolidated, with John E. King at the head. Towns the size of Red Lake Falls, and Windom, too, can no more than fairly support one paper, and the sooner that the crazy idea that such places should have from one to four papers is done away with, the better it will be for both the business men and the owners and far better results realized. Let other towns follow suit.

J. B. Armstrong left Thursday evening for Ada, where he spent a couple of days on business. Monday he met Mrs. Armstrong at Fargo, and the family proceeded from that place to their new home at Missoula Mont. Berthon and Armstrong expect to open their new clothing store in that town early in August. They are much pleased at the outlook and Red Lake Falls people will be glad to hear of their success. The band was out to give Jim a farewell Thursday evening and a large crowd was at the depot to bid him good-bye. Messrs. Armstrong and Berthon and their estimable families will be sadly missed from the business and social circles of Red Lake Falls.

A GAZETTE reporter has been out getting "near to natures heart" this week, and was surprised and pleased at the evidences of development on every hand. The crop situation is especially good and some banner yields may be looked for. Clem Mercier and Tom Dougherty, both of Red Lake Falls township, have the best fields of winter rye we have ever seen in Red Lake county. Oats will be a big crop, and timothy and clover were never so abundant. Most of the farmers are raising fodder corn this year and there are other evidences of a growth in the dairying line. In the northwestern part of Gervais township, Claus Hendricks, Franz Schmitz and Peter Matthies are each building large barns, each of them large enough to house eighty tons of hay.

Charles E. Boughton and son, Judge of Probate Tarrant, Joseph Helm jr. and the local GAZETTE scribe started for Crookston early Tuesday morning in Mr. Boughton's automobile with the intention of taking in the Barum & Baily circus in the afternoon and returning the same evening. Whether or not it was because his namesake was along or because the sign wasn't right, but in either event the "old Nick" pursued the party with extreme vigilance both on the down and back trips. Ill luck was at all times in evidence, and Crookston was not reached until after the circus was over. The auto was placed in the hands of a "doctor" and was fixed up in first class style for the return trip Wednesday morning, but there wasn't any use of hoping for better luck, and THE GAZETTE will refrain for disclosing the horrible details of the home trip. Autos are considerably like human beings and have their days off, and because we struck ill luck on this trip it is no reason to think that the horseless wagon is ever thus—although if a long auto journey is contemplated it perhaps might be advisable to lay in a goodly supply of eatables before attempting the trip.

SISTER ROSE.

BY WILKIE COLLINS

CHAPTER XII.—(CONTINUED.)

The principal article of furniture in the Hall of Justice was a long, clumsy deal table, covered with green baize. At the head of this table sat the president and his court, with their hats on, backed by a heterogeneous collection of patriots officially connected in various ways with the proceedings that were to take place. Below the front of the table, a railed-off space, with a gallery beyond, was appropriated by the general public—mostly represented, as to the gallery, on this occasion, by women, all sitting together on forms, knitting, shirt-mending, and baby-linen making, as coolly as if they were at home. Parallel with the side of the table farthest from the great door of entrance, was a low platform railed off, on which the prisoners, surrounded by their guard, were now assembled to await their trial. The sun shone in brightly from a high window, and a hum of ceaseless talking pervaded the hall cheerfully, as Lomaque entered it. He was a privileged man here, as at the prison; and he made his way in by a private door, so as to pass the prisoners' platform, and to walk round it, before he got to a place behind the president's chair. Trudaine, standing with his sister on the outermost limits of the group, nodded significantly as Lomaque looked up at him for an instant. He had contrived on his way to the tribunal, to get an opportunity of reading the paper which the chief-agent had slipped into his cravat. It contained these lines:

"I have just discovered who the citizen and citoyenne Dubois are. There is no chance for you but to confess everything. By that means you may inculpate a certain citizen holding authority, and may make it his interest, if he loves his own life, to save yours and your sister's."

Arrived at the back of the president's chair, Lomaque recognized his two trusty subordinates, Magloire and Picard, waiting among the assembled patriot officials to give their evidence. Beyond them, leaning against the wall, addressed by no one, and speaking to no one, stood the superintendent, Danville. Doubt and suspense were written in every line of his face; the fretfulness of an uneasy mind expressed itself in his slightest gestures—even in his manner of passing a handkerchief over his face, on which the perspiration was gathering thick and fast already.

"Silence!" cried the usher of the court for the time being, a hoarse-voiced man in top-boots, with a huge sabre buckled to his side, and a bludgeon in his hand. "Silence for the citizen-president!" he reiterated, striking his bludgeon on the table.

The president rose and proclaimed that the sitting for the day had begun, then sat down again.

The momentary silence which followed was interrupted by a sudden confusion among the prisoners on the platform. Two of the guards sprang in among them. There was the thump of a heavy fall—a scream of terror from some of the female prisoners—then another dead silence, broken by one of the guards, who walked across the hall with a bloody knife in his hand, and laid it on the table. "Citizen-president," he said, "I have to report that one of the prisoners has just stabbed himself." There was a murmuring exclamation—"Is that all?" among the women spectators as they resumed their work. Suicide at the bar of justice was no uncommon occurrence under the Reign of Terror.

"Name?" asked the president, quietly taking up his pen and opening a book.

"Martigne," answered the hump-backed gaoler, coming forward to the table.

"Description?"

"Ex-royalist coachmaker to the tyrant Capet."

"Accusation?"

"Conspiracy in prison."

The president nodded, and entered in the book—"Martigne, coachmaker. Accused of conspiracy in prison. Anticipated course of law by suicide. Action accepted as sufficient confession of guilt. Goods confiscated. 1st Thermidor, year two of the Republic."

"Silence!" cried the man with the bludgeon, as the president dropped a little sand on the entry, and signing to the gaoler that he might remove the dead body, closed the book.

"Any special cases this morning?" resumed the president, looking round at the group before him.

"There is one," said Lomaque, making his way to the back of the official chair. "Will it be convenient to you, citizen, to take the case of Louis Trudaine and Rose Danville first? Two of my men are detained here as witnesses and their time is valuable to the Republic."

The president marked a list of names before him, and handed it to the crier or usher, placing the figures one and two against Louis Trudaine and Rose Danville.

While Lomaque was backing again to his former place behind the chair, Danville approached and whispered to him—"There is a rumor that secret information has reached you about the citizen and citoyenne Dubois. Is it true? Do you know who they are?"

"Yes," answered Lomaque; "but I have superior orders to keep the information to myself just at present."

The eagerness with which Danville put this question, and the disappointment he showed on getting no satisfactory answer to it, were of a nature to satisfy the observant chief agent that his superintendent was really as ignorant as he appeared to be on the subject of the man and woman Dubois. That one mystery, at any rate, was still, for Danville, a mystery unrevealed.

"Louis Trudaine! Rose Danville!" shouted the crier, with another rap of his bludgeon.

The two came forward, at the appeal, to the front railing of the platform. The first sight of her judges, the first shock on confronting the pitiless curiosity of the audience, seemed to overwhelm Rose. She turned from deadly pale to crimson, then to pale again, and hid her face on her brother's shoulder. How fast she heard his heart throbbing! How the tears filled her eyes as she felt that his fear was all for her!

"Now!" said the president, writing down their names. "Denounced by whom?"

Magloire and Picard stepped forward to the table. The first answered, "By citizen superintendent Danville."

CHAPTER XIII.

THE reply made a great stir and sensation among both prisoners and audience.

"Accused of what?" pursued the president.

"The male prisoner, of conspiracy against the Republic; the female prisoner, of criminal knowledge of the same."

"Produce your proofs in answer to this order."

Picard and Magloire opened their minutes of evidence, and read to the president the same particulars which they had formerly read to Lomaque in the secret police office.

"Good," said the president, when they had done; "we need trouble ourselves with nothing more than the identifying of the citizen and citoyenne Dubois, which, of course, you are prepared for. Have you heard the evidence," he continued, turning to the prisoners; while Picard and Magloire consulted together in whispers, looking perplexedly towards the chief agent, who stood silent behind them. "Have you heard the evidence, prisoners? Do you wish to say anything? If you do, remember that the time of this tribunal is precious, and that you will not be suffered to waste it."

"I demand permission to speak for myself and for my sister," answered Trudaine. "My object is to save the time of the tribunal by making a confession."

The faint whisperings, audible among the women spectators a moment before, ceased instantaneously as he pronounced the word confession. In the breathless silence, his low, quiet tones penetrated to the remotest corners of the hall; while, suppressing externally all evidences of the death-agony of hope within him, he continued his address in these words:

"I confess my secret visits to the house in the Rue de Clery. I confess that the persons whom I went to see are the persons pointed at in the evidence; and, lastly, I confess that my object in communicating with them as I did, was to supply them with the means of leaving France. If I had acted from political motives to the political prejudice of the existing government, I admit that I would be guilty of that conspiracy against the republic with which I am charged. But no political purpose animated, no political necessity urged me, in performing the action which has brought me to the bar of this tribunal. The persons whom I aided in leaving France were without political influence or political connections. I acted solely from private motives of humanity towards them and towards others—motives which a good republican may feel, and yet not turn traitor to the welfare of his country."

"Are you ready to inform the court, next, who the man and woman Dubois really are?" inquired the president, impatiently.

"I am ready," answered Trudaine. "But first I desire to say one word in reference to my sister, charged here at the bar with me." His voice grew less steady, and for the first time, his color began to change, as Rose lifted her face from his shoulder and looked up at him eagerly. "I implore the tribunal to consider my sister as innocent of all active participation in what is charged against me as a crime"—he went on. "Having spoken with candor about myself, I have some claim to be believed when I speak of her; when I assert that she neither did help me nor could help me. If there be blame, it is mine only; if punishment, it is I alone who should suffer."

He stopped suddenly and grew confused. It was easy to guard himself from the peril of looking at Rose, but he could not escape the hard trial to his self-possession of hearing her if she spoke. Just as he pronounced the last sentence, she raised her face again from his shoulder, and eagerly whispered to him.

"No, no, Louis! Not that sacrifice, after all the others—not that, though you should force me into speaking to them myself!"

She abruptly quitted her hold of him, and fronted the whole court in an instant. The railing in front of her shook with the quivering of her arms and hands as she held by it to support herself! Her hair lay tangled on her shoulders; her face had assumed a strange fixedness; her gentle blue eyes, so soft and tender at all other times, were lit up wildly. A low hum of murmured curiosity and admiration broke from the women of the audience. Some rose eagerly from the benches, others cried:

"Listen! Listen! She is going to speak!"

She did speak. Silvery and pure the sweet voice, sweeter than ever in sadness, stole its way through the gross sounds—through the coarse humming and the hissing whispers.

"My lord the president"—began the poor girl, firmly. Her next words were drowned in a volley of hisses from the women.

"Ah! aristocrat, aristocrat! None of your accursed titles here!" was their shrill cry at her. She fronted the fierce gestures which accompanied it, with the steady light still in her eyes, with the strange rigidity still fastened on her face. She would have spoken again through the uproar and execration, but her brother's voice overpowered her.

"Citizen-president," he cried, "I have not concluded. I demand leave to complete my confession. I implore the tribunal to attach no importance to what my sister says. The trouble and terror of this day have shaken her intellect. She is not responsible for her words—I assert it solemnly, in the face of the whole court!"

The blood flew up into his white face as he made the assertion. Even at that supreme moment the great heart of the man reproached him for yielding himself to a deception, though the motive of it was to save his sister's life.

"Let her speak! let her speak!" exclaimed the women, as Rose, without moving, without looking at her brother, without seeming even to have heard what he said, made a second attempt to address her judges, in spite of Trudaine's interposition.

"Silence!" shouted the man with the bludgeon. "Silence, you women! the citizen-president is going to speak."

"The prisoner Trudaine has the ear of the court," said the president, "and may continue his confession. If the female prisoner wishes to speak, she may be heard afterwards. I enjoin both the accused persons to make short work of it with their addresses to me, or they will make their case worse instead of better. I command silence among the audience, and if I am not obeyed, I will clear the hall. Now, prisoner Trudaine, I invite you to proceed. No more about your sister; let her speak for herself. Your business and ours is with the man and woman Dubois now. Are you, or are you not, ready to tell the court who they are?"

"I repeat that I am ready," answered Trudaine. "The Citizen Dubois is a servant. The woman Dubois is the mother of the man who has denounced me—Superintendent Danville."

A low, murmuring, rushing sound of hundreds of exclaiming voices, all speaking, half-suppressedly, at the same moment, followed the delivery of the answer. No officer of the court attempted to control the outburst of astonishment. The infection of it spread to the persons on the platform, to the crier himself, to the judges of the tribunal, lounging, but the moment before, so carelessly silent in their chairs. When the noise was at length quelled, it was subdued in the most instantaneous manner by one man, who shouted from the throng behind the president's chair:

"Clear the way there! Superintendent Danville is taken ill!"

A vehement whispering and contending of many voices interrupting each other, followed; then a swaying among the assembly of official people; then a great stillness; then the sudden appearance of Danville alone, at the table.

LOVE NOWADAYS.

Two Asked Advice About It and Then Rejected It.

There is no use of opposing a love affair, not even when the actors play into your own hands, says the New York Herald. I know what I'm saying. I've had the experience with two—the young and the old man. My first experience was with a young man who didn't know his mind and asked me what he had better do, and I, like a father, told him he'd better not marry the girl he was courting. He went right off and married her.

An old man from the country came into the car where I was reading my morning paper and sat down at my side. "Beg your pardon, sir," he said. "Did you ever court a grass widder?"

"Oh, yes," I said, "I've courted a dozen or more. Why?"

"Did you ever marry one?"

"Yes."

"Waller, p'r'aps yer kin give a chap a point or two?"

"Oh, certainly; all the points you want."

"Are they any different from other women?"

"Say, old fellow, I've courted all sorts of women, both married and unmarried, and they are all just alike. They do all the courting and generally propose before you have courted them a week."

"Waller, what's yer opin'n?"

"It is this: 'The man who marries one is a jackass.'"

The old fellow scratched his head for a moment and after he had got his idea racked in the right spot he said: "Waller, hain't I as much constitutionally right to be a jackass as yer have? Waller, I guess, and I'm goin' to 'cept her proposal by wire. Write it out for me, won't yer?"

Society.

Not all misery is in the slums. Not all danger to society arises from the victims of poverty. It may be that there is as great danger to society from the boulevards as from the slums.—Rev. R. A. White.

WOMAN'S REALM

STYLES ARE PLAIN

FEW FRILLS ON CHILDREN'S GARMENTS THIS SEASON.

Party Dresses May Be Ornamental, but Absolute Simplicity Is the Rule for All the Other Costumes.

Plainer than ever are the styles for children this season, and it is the dress that is well cut and made of nice material that counts rather than the one elaborately trimmed.

Of course there is the dainty batiste dress for the party that every child loves, but on the whole the simple frock, with straight lines, is what the shops are selling. This particular model has only the shoulder and underarm seams.

Coat with Only Shoulder and Underarm Seams.

It has large pockets with broad laps and the fronts are faced to form lapels, and it has the regulation coat sleeves. To make the medium size of this coat it would take three and one-quarter yards of material 27 inches wide; two yards of goods 44 inches, and about 1 and three-quarters yards in 52-inch width.

This model makes up very well in the small checked cheviot, and black and white shepherd's plaid with a little red cloth collar, and a red and gold emblem on the arm gives it a good dash of color and style. The boys' coats are indeed making "little men" of them. They are of the tan covert cloth, and the model is exactly like that his father wears. A regular little spring overcoat. Some of them are lined with twilled lining, but most of them are not. Boys from 4 years up to young men all wear these, and the little fellow with such a coat is proud indeed.

HINTS FOR THE HOSTESS.

Flowers for Bridge Whist Prizes Is a New Idea.

No Prizes for Bridge.

A popular hostess, noted for charming and unique affairs, has been giving a series of bridge parties with the prize feature eliminated. Instead, she had two vases filled with beautiful flowers on the refreshment table. At the close of the repast the ladies having the two highest scores were awarded the flowers. The same sum was expended for the bouquets; as otherwise would have been spent for prizes and every one was perfectly delighted with the plan. It seemed far less commercial and was altogether a welcome change to both guests and hostess.

For a Conundrum Tea.

Some time ago a correspondent asked what to serve at a "conundrum tea." This list may yet be of timely assistance:

1. A survivor of the flood? (Ham.)
2. Women of grit? (Sandwiches.)
3. A meat that is not wet? (Dried beef.)
4. Impertinence? (Apple sauce.)
5. Spring's offerings? (Water.)
6. For old maids and bachelors? (Pickles.)
7. Tabby's party? (Catsup.)
8. Boston's overthrow? (Tea.)
9. What all need? (Bread and butter.)
10. New England's brains? (Baked beans.)
11. A young man's sweetheart? (Honey.)
12. An unruly member? (Tongue.)
13. Sahara? (Dessert.)
14. What printers hate? (Pie.)
15. What I do when hurt? (Ice cream.)

This can be used at church affair serving "a la carte," charging a small sum for each article.

Position of the Hostess.

When taking guests upstairs should the hostess precede or follow them? When descending who takes the lead? On sending out invitations is it proper to use the word "city" or "town" to designate the place where you reside? When sisters send regrets should their cards be enclosed separately or in one envelope? SUBSCRIBER.

In reply to your first question, the hostess should precede her guests, showing them the way upstairs; in going down the guests may go first. In writing an invitation the name of the place should be written out and neither the word "city" nor "town" used. The cards of two sisters may be enclosed in one envelope and addressed to the hostess or sent separately. To be in strictly good form regrets are not sent on cards.

Regrets for a Wedding.

I am invited to a fashionable wedding the last of the month. I do not know the bride personally, but have had intimate business relations with her father. Distance will prevent my attending. What form of regret is proper to send and is a present necessary? BACHELOR.

If the ceremony is at the house you must write a note expressing your regret at not being able to witness the ceremony and thank them for being asked. Address to the mother of the bride, or you may word your regrets in exactly the same form as the invitation, in the third person. No reply is required for a church ceremony, nor is a present ever necessary. Do as you feel inclined.

For a Junior Endeavor Society.

Would you kindly give us an idea for a reception to be given next month by the Junior Society of Christian Endeavor? Something in way of decoration, programme and refreshments. JUNIOR.

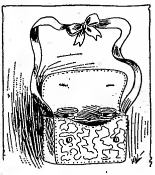
Your request is rather vague. At such an affair a social committee is generally appointed to look out for the details. Palms, flowers and flags are the usual decorations as the affair is almost always given in a hall or the church parlors and such places are hard to decorate for simple occasions. A series of tableaux, charades, interspersed with music is an enjoyable programme. Light refreshments are generally in order; frappe conveniently placed, ice cream with a sauce of pecan nuts chopped in maple syrup or a Japanese soey which is a rich fruit dressing poured over vanilla cream, small frosted cakes and bonbons.

MADAME MERRI.

CASE FOR OPERA GLASSES.

Does Away with Danger of Forgetting the Articles.

Few things are more difficult to carry in the hand than opera glasses, even when they are provided with a leather case, as they are often laid down or left behind at the theater. A case which one can suspend by a ribbon from the wrist is the safest of all and the most comfortable to carry, and we give a sketch illustrating a case of this description which can easily be made out of any odd remnants of brocade, silk or satin, while in soft leather it might also be very useful.



This case would look pretty if the outer side could be made of floral brocade, bordered with stitching, and the lining of pale green satin, while the ribbon might be either green or pink, according to fancy.

NOTES ON FASHION.

Gray lizard skin elaborately cut into open-work embroidery is one of the many little extravagances in the shoe line. These shoes are high, but exquisitely supple, while the openwork displays the embroidered stockings underneath.

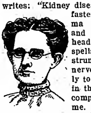
Square sunshades are an innovation of the season. Will bizarre effects never cease?

Grass-green or rose-red shoes are to be fashionable with thin white frocks.

The variety of bows for wear with blouses is infinite, and indeed the butterfly bow has a most prominent place among this season's accessories.

COULD HARDLY TOTTER ABOUT.

A Vivid Description of the Most Insidious of Diseases.



Miss Emma Shirley, Killbuck, N. Y., writes: "Kidney disease mysteriously fastened itself upon me two years ago and brought awful headaches and dizzy spells. I was all unstrung, weak and nervous, could scarcely totter about. Pains in the side and back completely unnerved me. My food distressed me, I looked badly and the kidneys were noticeably deranged. I sank lower and lower until given up and at this critical time began with Doan's Kidney Pills. Details are unnecessary. Twelve boxes cured me and I weigh six pounds more than ever before. They saved my life."

How He Got a Verdict.

It was a case of breach of promise. The defendant was allowed to say a w... in his own behalf.

"Yes," he said, "I kissed her almost continuously every evening I called at her house."

Lawyer (for defendant)—Then you confess it?

Defendant—Yes, I do confess it. But I had to do it.

Lawyer—You had to do it! What do you mean?

Defendant—That was the only way I could keep her from singing.

The jury gave a verdict for the defendant without leaving their seats.

Little Pitchers.

Tommy—Why, Mr. Smith, you didn't go in the ocean steamer after all, did you?

Guest—What makes you ask that, Tommy? I had no idea of going in the steamer.

Tommy—Well, all the same, mamma said when papa told her he had asked you to dinner, why did he do that, because she was sure you would be half-seas over.

THE STORY OF A WISCONSIN MAN IN WESTERN CANADA.

Three Years Ago Worth Only $2,000; To-Day is Worth $13,000.

The following is a copy of a letter, of which the Agents of the Canadian Government throughout the United States receive similar ones many times during the year:

Cayley, Alta., Dec. 7, 1906.

Agent Canadian Government,
Watertown, S. D.

Dear Sir:

Your letter dated Nov. 27th at hand and was very glad to hear from you. I see that you are still at work persuading people to move into the Canadian Northwest. I must tell you that I owe you many thanks for persuading me to come out here, am only sorry that I wasn't persuaded sooner, and there is still plenty of good chances for many more right at the present time. I hope that you will be able to induce more to make a start out to this part of the country.

Now I must tell you what I have accomplished since I came out here and it won't be three years till the 1st of July. I shall shortly receive my patent for my homestead, the homestead cost me $10.00 in all, to-day it is worth $30.00 per acre, but it is not for sale. Then a year ago last May I bought 320 acres at $7.00 per acre and sold this fall for $20.00 per acre and cleared a profit of $4,160.00. How is that for the Northwest? I now have 320 acres of land and all paid for, 15 head of horses, 30 head of cattle, 22 pigs, 2 sheep and about 150 chickens and other poultry, and all new machinery and everything is paid for. We also bought 8 lots in Calgary and 7 in High River. We gave $470 for the 15 lots and they are paid for. At present I consider myself worth $13,000.00, and when I left Wisconsin less than three years ago I had about $2,000.00. This year I threshed a little over 4,000 bushels of grain, have about one thousand bushels of fine potatoes and about five hundred bushels of turnips. Mrs. Beisiegel sold about $200 worth of garden truck and poultry this fall. Now there are lots of others in this community who did as well as I did in the same length of time.

The family and myself are all well at this writing and hope this letter will find you the same.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) PHILIP BEISIEGEL,
Cayley, Alta., Canada.

"Now, after taking Peruna for six months, I am as well as I ever was. Peruna has worked wonders for me. I believe Peruna is the best medicine in the world, and I recommend it to my friends."

THE EVAPORATION OF APPLES A SIMPLE PROCESS

Increasing Demand for Dried Apples—By H. P. Gould Assistant Pomologist, Bureau of Plant Industry.

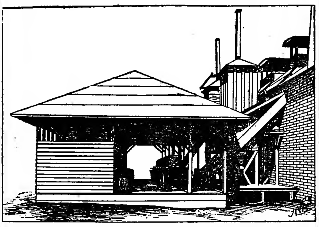
There is an increasing demand for dried apples of the highest quality. The tendency has sometimes been to make quantity at the expense of quality. But prices are governed not only by the supply but also by the grade. The cleanest, whitest fruit, that is well cored, trimmed, bleached, ringed and dried, is most in demand. Carelessness in any particular injures the product.

Primarily the economic usefulness of an apple evaporator is through its utilization of windfalls and the poorer grades of fruit which cannot be marketed to good advantage in a fresh state, and it is these grades that are most often evaporated. But the magnitude of the crop also influences the grade of the evaporated product in a decided way. In seasons of abundant crops and low prices for fresh fruit large quantities of apples that would ordinarily be barreled are evaporated and the grade of stock produced is correspondingly improved. On the other hand, in years of scanty crops, when all apples that can possibly be shipped are in demand at high prices, only the very poorest fruit is evaporated, as a rule, thus lowering the grade of the output.

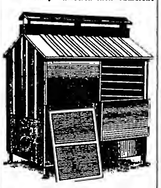
The commercial grading of evaporated apples is based primarily on appearance rather than on dessert quality, and the fact that one variety may make a better flavored product than another is not considered. As a rule, a product of high commercial grade can be made from any sort which has a firm texture and bleaches to a satisfactory degree of whiteness. A variety of high dessert quality, such as the Northern Spy, may be expected to make an evaporated product of correspondingly high flavor.

In sections where the Baldwin apple is grown extensively it is in demand at the commercial evaporators, as it meets the requirements in a fair degree and it is also available in relatively large quantities. In the Ben Davis sections that variety supplies a similar demand.

Most early varieties lack sufficient firmness of texture for the best results and are undesirable on this account. On the other hand, some comparatively early sorts, such as Gravenstein and Yellow Summer Pearmain, are considerably prized in some sections; the dessert quality of the latter is especially high.



Paring Shed and Bleachers of a Large Kiln Evaporator Built of Brick.



A Small Portable Evaporator Constructed of Wood.

The fumes of burning sulphur are employed not only to make the fruit white where the freshly cut surfaces have become discolored by contact with the air, but to prevent further discoloration after it is sliced. Sulphuring is also generally supposed to be necessary to destroy fungi and insects, though under present methods of handling this is open to question.

Some of the cook-stove evaporators are small box-like structures, usually made of sheet iron or galvanized iron, of such a size that they can be placed on top of an ordinary cook stove. They are arranged for holding a series of small trays, on which the fruit is placed after it has been prepared for drying. Various sizes are in use, from one covering only a portion of the top of a common kitchen stove and having a capacity of only a bushel or so a day, to those requiring the entire top of a stove on which to operate it.

Another style consists of a water-tight rectangular box of tin, upon the upper surface of which the fruit is spread. The heat is supplied by boiling water, with which the evaporator is filled, the temperature being maintained by placing one end of the evaporator on top of a stove. There are various styles of this type.

Portable evaporators are especially convenient when it is desired to dry only a few bushels of fruit at any one time. The usual sizes have a capacity of five to ten bushels a day, and even more in some cases, although the quantity will of course vary with the attention given to them. As they are complete in themselves and are not too heavy to be readily moved, they may be placed wherever convenience from time to time dictates.

Fig. 1 shows an evaporator of this type which is constructed entirely of wood, except the parts in direct contact with the heater. There is space for ten trays for holding fruit, similar to the one in the illustration, the dimensions of which are two and one-half to three feet. Each tray holds about one-half bushel of fruit. Modifications of such an equipment to suit individual needs and conveniences readily suggest themselves.

Perhaps there is no step in the entire process that requires better-trained judgment than the matter of determining when the fruit is sufficiently dried to meet the requirements. Like several other steps in the process it is largely a matter of experience, though there are certain general features which are capable of being reduced to words.

The fruit should be so dry that when a handful of slices is pressed together firmly into a ball the slices will be "springy" enough to separate at once upon being released from the hand. In this condition there will be no fruit, or only an occasional piece, that has any visible moisture on the surface. In a slice of average dryness, it should not be possible to press any free juice into view in a freshly made cross section of it. The general "feel" of the fruit, as it is handled, should be a soft, velvety, leathery texture.

The Plum Gouger

The plum gouger is one of the so-called "snout beetles," about one-quarter of an inch in length, the general color is gray, and the head and thorax (mid-region of the body) yellowish. The beetle gnaws small holes in the young plums in which it deposits its eggs. The larva or grub hatching from the egg gnaws deeper and feeds on the kernel, and finally eats a hole out through the plum just before the latter matures.

In a well-kept orchard which is sprayed with some of the arsenical sect is not liable to do much damage. These poisons should be applied in weaker strengths for plums, about two-thirds to three-fourths the strength as is used for apple. One method is to jar the tree early in the morning from the time the blossoms are on until the beetles seem to have disappeared. In this practice the beetles should be caught in sheets spread on the ground under the tree, and destroyed.

EASILY PUT RIGHT

EQUALIZING DISTANCE NO PROBLEM FOR TIM MOYNAHAN.

His Orders Were to Have Tool House Half Way Between Mile Posts, and Consequently Half Way It Was.

About ten years before the Eastern railroad was leased to the Boston & Maine, that portion of the old road between Swampscott and Salem was in charge of Section Foreman Timothy Moynahan, according to a Boston correspondent.

His strongest point was in doing just as he was told, and doing that with energy and accuracy. So when he was notified from Beverly by Roadmaster Stevens that the section lengths were to be changed, and that he was to move his tool house from the western end of the Salem yard to half way between mile posts 15 and 16, he started out with the determination to move the house half way, no more, no less.

To get this half-way point he stationed one of his men at mile post 15 and another at mile Post 16, and at a signal they started to walk toward each other until they met, and to a point opposite their meeting place the shanty was moved. This method of getting the correct distance did not quite suit Moynahan, especially when he remembered that one of the walkers was taller than the other, and the other tripped several times on the way down.

Tim Explains.

He carried this in his mind for nearly a year, when he met the engineers measuring through for signals, and asked them to tell him, as they measured, if his house was just half way or not.

When the measurement was taken the house was found to be 60 feet nearer mile post 16 than 15, and Moynahan, on being told, remarked that he thought he could fix things just right.

Later in the year the engineers met Moynahan in Salem, and asked him if his tool house was now half way between the mile posts?

"It is," he replied, "it's just half way."

"Did you have much trouble moving it?"

"No trouble at all; I just let it stay as it was and moved the mile post."

New Species of Zebra.

In Portuguese East Africa an explorer has discovered a new species of zebra, resembling the ordinary zebra in shape, but the head, neck, forelegs and fore half of the body are dark brown in color, the hind part of the body, including the legs, being striped. He also discovered a peculiar style of antelope similar in size and shape to the Boer roebuck or impala, the distinctive difference being a black line down the center of the back and on either hind leg down to the foot. When the animal is startled it immediately takes to flight, the initial leap being fully ten feet through the air.

Gold Nugget in Fish's Stomach.

A gold nugget, weighing several ounces and thought to contain about two dollars' worth of gold, was found in the stomach of a yellowtail caught by Capt. Billy Graves of Long Beach, Cal., about ten miles out at sea.

The nugget is really a piece of rich ore, but how it came to be lodged in the stomach of the fish is a mystery.

The fish weighed 22 pounds and it is expected that every large fish caught here for some time to come will be examined with the greatest care by the fishermen.

Buried Under Fine Coal.

James Irving, an employe at a New York coal yard, fell into one of the big bins the other afternoon. The bin contained more than 100 tons of buckwheat coal, which is very fine. Irving sank into it so far that he couldn't get out. A few minutes later Adam Brown drove up to get a load of coal.

A trap about 14 by 17 inches in the bottom of the bin was opened and the coal began to pour out. About two tons had run into the wagon when Brown was startled to see a shovel and a man's legs dangling from the spout. Some of the workmen got busy with axes right away and Irving dropped out with a few tons of coal. He was unconscious, but at the hospital to which he was removed it was said that he had a good chance to recover.

Varied Uses of Peat.

Among the varied uses of peat, that for the production of gas is perhaps the least known, says the London Globe. It has been used for this purpose, however, for the last thirty years in the steel works of Notala, in Sweden. From 13,000 to 16,000 cubic yards of peat are thus used yearly. It costs rather more than coal gas, but has the advantage of containing scarcely any sulphur or phosphorus. And in several places in Europe peat gas is used for heating and in glass melting furnaces.

SCALY ERUPTION ON BODY.

Doctors and Remedies Fruitless—Suffered 10 Years—Completely Cured by Cuticura.

"Small sores appeared on each of my lower limbs and shortly afterwards they became so sore that I could scarcely walk. The sores began to heal, but small scaly eruptions appeared. The itching was so severe that I would scratch the sores until the blood began to flow. After I suffered thus about ten years I made a renewed effort to effect a cure. The eruptions by this time had appeared on every part of my body except my face and hands. The best doctor in my native county and many remedies gave no relief. All this was fruitless. Finally my hair began to fall out and I was rapidly becoming bald. A few months after, having used almost everything else, I thought I would try Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Soap. After using three boxes I was completely cured, and my hair was restored, after fourteen years of suffering and an expenditure of at least $50 or $60 in vainly endeavoring to find a cure. B. Hiram Mattingly, Vermillion, S. Dak., Aug. 18, 1906."

THE CELEBRATED RED LAKE FALLS CONCERT BAND

Will Play a Four Days Engagement at the Minnesota State Fair in September

An Enjoyable Trip.

The [illegible] received the following [illegible] Sunday from the boys [illegible] the [illegible] provisions for [illegible] the Red Lake river to Red [illegible]. They are [illegible] their [illegible] reading [illegible]. The letter was [illegible] the 19th [illegible].

We [illegible] would drop you a line and [illegible] to give you an opportunity of [illegible] the good people in civilization [illegible] we have fared thus far on our trip [illegible] Black Duck.

We left Thief River Falls at 2:30 p. m. [illegible] 13, with the sky some [illegible]. It sprinkled a little before we had [illegible] five miles, but at five [illegible] cloud came up and [illegible] storm. Before we could get the tent up and the boat secured it was [illegible] we took to the woods, threw [illegible] in a heap, piled on top, [illegible] with the tent and let [illegible]. It didn't rain, the clouds just [illegible], and as far as getting out [illegible] why we only lay in six [illegible] and when we got out [illegible] rainbows in the sky [illegible] the seat of every ones pants [illegible] the blankets were not [illegible] in a pouring rain [illegible] two miles up at a far[illegible] he didn't know whether [illegible] as he had twelve of his [illegible] in getting in and [illegible] when we were [illegible] in the middle of the floor. There were [illegible] in the bed and the [illegible]. The "Mate" got [illegible] the eye and it was swollen shut for the [illegible] day. Father Edmund [illegible]. The Custodian of the Keg [illegible] things, and your humble servant stood in the middle of the floor [illegible] his underwear most of the night. We gave a concert before going to bed, the instrumentation being two cornets, an organ and a vocalist. "Herr Von Buse of Dutch fame." His famous production "Rocked in the Cradle with the Angels" brought down the house.

We left there at about seven the next morning and took dinner at Kratka (Skunk Town). Our aim was to get to the Lake as quickly as possible and we traveled on, reaching High Landing in the middle of the afternoon and Park Landing ([illegible]) in the evening. We set up there and had a peaceful night's rest.

[illegible] we were up bright and early and started as soon as possible. Thus far the engine worked perfectly and everything went smoothly, as far as travel[illegible], but from here on we [illegible] terribly with weeds and the [illegible]. We passed [illegible] met [illegible] was giving us [illegible] pass thru them eas[illegible] the [illegible] noon. At five in [illegible] within five miles of [illegible] have reached it by night [illegible] but we struck a log jam, and only three Indians to break it. They worked until 9 o'clock and didn't succeed so we decided to sleep in the boat. In fact it was all we could do for there were no banks to the river here, just swamps all along. It is a very treacherous looking stream for about 20 miles near the outlet.

Then began one of the worst nights we hope we ever have to go thru with. We dispensed with supper as none of us had an appetite for mosquitoes on toast just then. If anyone ever tells you that the mosquitoes are thick up in the swamps, just believe them, it cant be exaggerated. In spite of mosquito netting and a comforter a piece, in spite of all or anything you could do they would crawl through and they certainly knew how to bite. Their relatives down in civilization have lost the art. It was still and clear, in fact nothing interrupted the beautiful harmony of the Mosquito Symphbny Orchetra on Mosquito Bay. An animal of some nature played the drum and traps in such a manner as would have made Batch green with jealousy if he could have heard them and as far as tone quality is concerned Joe and Frank would certainly have to take a back seat with their violins. The bull frogs have Sam and Bert played out on the tubas. In fact the music was of such a nature that we didn't go to sleep at all that night except Father Edmund and he would sleep in a cyclone if there were no cornets in the orchestra. Each family of mosquitoes carried his own private lantern and the orchestra was well lighted up as well as the places of amusement for the little ones.

That morning at 4:30 the log drivers showed up but Mate and Herr Von Buse had already started the jam. At six a heavy rain came up to add to our pleasure and lasted an hour. It was 9:30 when we finally got started again after having been delayed 17 hours and we had our first view of the lake at 11 o'clock Tuesday morning. As far as the eye could see there was nothing but water and to those of us who never saw a large body of water before, it appeared as if there were a large hill of it. We went up the beach a couple of miles; set camp ate dinner and took a good nap, getting up in time to get supper and to get the tent fixed for sleeping. That night we didn't have a mosquito and we slept like logs. We camped here until Wednesday noon, had some duck and strawberries for dinner. At half past one we started for the agency with quite a heavy sea rolling but as we were going with it, it didn't bother us much but ,Fr, Edmund took a trip to Europe and was liberal enough to give over all his good dinner to the fishes The rest of us were too stingy. We landed at 5 o'clock after having traveled 115 miles from Thief River Falls in 24 hours steady running. Of course we were bothered a great deal with weeds. In one or two places it took us a half hour to make a mile or so. We figure we can go back in half the time.

That evening we met some fine people, one, a certain Mr. Goddard, engineer of the Indian school, was one of the young fellows who went through our town last August in a little launch bound for Winnipeg. He tooks us all through the school. It is a large building with girls and boys dormotories, an immense dining room, a steam laundry, a large kitchen, school rooms, gymnasium, bath rooms, private rooms for instructors, offices, etc. etc. There is a large commissary department in connection which furnishes all suppies. The boys get 4 suits of clothes entire every year. The girls are taught to make their dresses. There are 10 months of school, it being out at present. About 110 are in attendance ,and they have to fight to keep them there. They have a force of police to catch and punish the runaways. The building is gas lighted, fully equipped with hot and cold water, plumbing, sewerage, fire protection, and fire escapes thoroly modern in every respect. They are taught not only from books, but all branches of practical trade. In fact the government has left nothing undone. They have more advantages than the white boys and girls of moderate means and yet they have to be forced from their parents and into the schools. Those who finish here are sent away to the larger Indian Colleges. if they wish. There are several Carlisle and Haskell graduates here.

Besides this school there are two churches here. Both services are held in Chippewa. The rector, Reverend Fred Smith of the Episcopal church, is an Indian and Father Thomas is in charge of the Catholic parish. There are several stores, hotels and many residences It is a very pretty place and should any of the Red Lake Falls people want a good outing, take the train to Redby and from there drive by stage five miles to the agency and we can assure them they will never regret their trip

Yesterday morning we went across the lake to the Cross Lake Indian school on the government steamboat, "The Marguerite." We spent all day there. Supt. Davis took us thru the building which is not as large as the Red Lake school but has every advantage. There are about 65 in attendance there. There is a store and logging headquarters on that side, but no churches. The Indians on the north side of the lake won't stand for any religion at all, The original religion of the Indians "The Grand Medicine" prevails in its original form, The Indians on this side make fun of the old religion across the lake.

We took dinner at the logging camp and we were certainly treated right.

We are invited tonight by Mr. Goddard to bring our instruments and music up to the school and we are to have a little cards, dancing and good time in general. Supt. Allen has some lady relatives visiting him and his wife and with a few other ladies who are here for an outing we expect to pass a very pleasant evening. The white people here are certainly fine, as civilized as the Indians are savage. We have seen lots of Indian camps with their tepees, birch bark canoes, dogs etc. living in their wild state.

Tomorrow morning, Saturday, we will leave for the Black Duck river and we are going to attempt to make Blackduck altho we haven't had much encouragement of late. At any rate we are going entirely around the lower lake across the narrows and come home that way.

The lake is very shallow for about a mile or so. In fact it is not over 30 feet deepest places. Day before yesterday we struck rocks about a half mile from shore and had to get out and guide our boat off to keep it from filling with the waves.

Well we hope we are as lucky with the rest of our journey as we have been thus far. If any one should ask you if we are enjoying ourselves just tell them "you bet" for us. We'll have lots of pictures to show and more to tell when we get home.

Yours for a good time,
EDWARD VII, Engineer,
FR. EDMUND, Captain,
R. LUCIUS, the Mate,
HERR VON BUSE, Custodian of the Keg.

THEO. LA BISSONIERE

INVADED THE CITY

Modern Shylocks of North End Burg Come For Their Pound of Flesh.

No less than a half a dozen Thief River Falls bankers, followed by a bigger bunch of the faithful, invaded the county seat Monday morning ostensibly for the purpose of attending the meeting of the board of county commissioners called to act on their late petition secured by a canvas of Marshall and adjoining counties. The reason for this invasion of the "holier than thou" gang was accounted for from the fact that they had it figured down pat that their bluffing tactics on the commissioners the past few weeks would bear fruit, and the board would meet, lest the mighty hand of the gang of boodlers further up creek would smite them to the heart.

However, from ancient history we find that several of the "best laid plans, etc.," do not always pan out as it would be nice to have them, and taking their cue from a recently promulgated popular song, the Thief River bunch "rode right in and turned around, then rode right out again." Strictly speaking, there was nothing doing, and even the tried and true Shaw and Aubol neglected to pass any stinging resolutions affecting the case.

There was no meeting of the board and it looks now as if Thief River will have to go to the courts in another long and costly fight to the taxpayers in order to make any further progress in their attempt to secure that which belongs to them not, or would result in benefit to anyone but themselves by a change. But, the people pay the bills—so what does Thief River Falls care.

A GAZETTE reporter interviewed two of the members of the county board who were in the city yesterday to get from them the exact reason for their non appearance at the meeting, and the following was the statement of both: "During the past ten days we have both consulted counsel outside of Red Lake county and in no way interested in the present county seat fight, and we have been advised in each case that until the old county seat removal petition, which Thief River claims is stolen, has been disposed of, there is absolutely no use of taking action on the new one, and in order to save the county what would be a still further useless expense in this fight, we have simply kept away from these meetings."

This is a sufficient explanation to assure the people of the county that the majority of the county board are acting to the best interests of the taxpayers, An enormous expense would be incurred by the calling of an election on this new petition and then after it was all over to have it knocked out in the courts by one side or the other would mean a direct loss. Thief River Falls builded better than they knew when they set up the cry that the old petition had been stolen, but they will now have to produce it and destroy it publicly or else prove in the courts that it is no longer in existence. There is a petition on file with the county auditor today signed by a large number of the signers of the old petition asking that some definate action be taken on that paper, but so far these demands have been entirely ignored by the Thief River partisans and they have been attempting to procure by bribery and fraud action on a petition that is in reality no petition at all.

Thief River Falls is particularly anxious for the county seat this year as the reaction from their boom is on them, and a few short years will see their town too dead to skin unless they can secure a "stimulant". Money is no object to them in in their crazy desires, but let it be resounded to the credit of all the county outside of their own corrupt haliwick that for once they are baffled and their offers of gold, made by Sunday-school workers, at that, have been turned down flat by the men whom the people elected to represent the public at large instead of Thief River Falls.

PATRONS ARE PAID

Last Pay Day at Creamery Gives Farmers Excellent Cash Returns.

The recent pay day at the local creamery was a good one for the patrons of that institution and substantial checks were given to each and all.

The receipts of cream for the month were the largest in the history of the local creamery and the steady growth of the plant is gratifying to the people in this part of the country.

The following is a list of patrons receiving over $50 for the month:

Idage Baril	$82.22
D. Patnode	81.15
J. Boutin	79.00
Wm. Schmper	72.47
Amie Carrier	76.06
C. Amoit	72.06
Ered Behn	65.19
A Bisson	65.88

A large number of others received in the neighborhood of fifty dollars and the creamery was the means of leaving a lot of money in the hands of the farmers of this neighborhood last month.

The local plant has had by far the most successful run in its history this year, and its list of patrons increases steadily. Manager Malvin knows his business thoroughly and is well liked by the patrons. Aside from this he puts out a product so good that the local plant generally gets a premium over market price for the output.

The Red Lake Falls creamery is now a decided success, but it can be made more so by the further cooperation of the farmers tributary to the city.

SCHOOL IS FINISHED

Four Weeks Session of Summer School Ends Saturday of Last Week.

The four week's session of the teachers training school for Red Lake county closed Saturday last, after a very successful season of work, and Conductor Yaeger and the other instructors have left for their homes

While the school was not nearly so well attended this year as formerly, nevertheless keen interest was manifest at all times by those who did attend, and good results are sure to develop from the fine work done.

The attendance at the school was practically all from the south end of the county, and while teachers from other parts evinced an interest early in the year, it was apparent that some pressure or other was brought upon them to stay away from the school this year. Just why this was done is not plain, but it seems strange that those most interested in this work let any local differences interfere with making the school a success, thereby leaving a chance to be cut out entirely on these schools henceforth. Whatever the reason there was not nearly the attendance the school warranted, but it is the teachers themselves that will feel the effects of not attending the greatest.

Prof. Yaeger and his corps of assistants are very highly spoken of by those that were enrolled, and aside from the attendance the school was a gratifying success in every particular.

SCHREITER'S PHARMACY

Believes In Northern Minnesota

J. E. Reynolds in Mankato Free Press: Northern Minnesota is a land of promise, a land of almost limitless resources and immeasureable possibilities. Its future greatness is assured. There is no guesswork wrapped around its development. There is no drawback attached to its industrial growth and expansion and above all it has the makings of of the finest dairy country in the United States if not in the world. It is destined to become the great agricultural section in the northwest. Those who have never visited that vast domain which lies north, northeast and northwest of the Twin Cities have no appreciation of the immense amount of wealth that must come from the bowels of the earth, the timber, and the soil, the productiveness of which is a surprise to those who have investigated crop conditions. There is room in that north country for thousands upon thousands of people and the day is not far distant when immigration will move swiftly in that direction and the land will be made to bloom as a rose. There are riches for those who do settle up and develop Northern Minnesota.

Ballasting the Road.

A crew of nearly one hundred Italian laborers is located here this week, engaged in the work of ballasting and fixing up the Northern Pacific tracks. The crews have their own boarding cars but buy their supplies in town, which stimulates trade in the grocery and meat line. The N. P. is at present doing a great amount of work on their line from Winnipeg junction to Grand Forks and rumor has it that they contemplate making some changes in their service here next year. It is stated that the congestion on their north line is great and by sending a part of their heavy business around this way they could greatly relieve matters, and at the same time have a shorter cut to to the western field. At any rate conciderable work is being done on this line this year and when it is finished it will be fit for any kind of service.

TRIAL OF HAYWOOD

For Murder of Gov. Steunenberg.

Defense Rests Its Case.

Boise, Idaho, July 20.—A day of arguments on the admissibility of points of evidence followed the announcement from the defense that they had no further witnesses to offer in behalf of Haywood. The jury was not brought into court, Judge Wood having been informed by counsel of their decision to rest without offer of sur-rebuttal. Clarence Darrow spoke for an hour and a half in the morning session. Senator Borah replied in the afternoon and was followed by E. F. Richardson. Judge Wood will probably announce his decision this morning.

To Exclude Evidence.

The point argued was the proposition to exclude consideration of evidence offered by the defense to show by proof of the deportation of miners and the employment of detectives in Cripple Creek district of Colorado that a conspiracy was formed among the mine owners and the citizens of the district to prevent the employment of members of the Western Federation of Miners. The position taken by the Haywood defense was that Harry Orchard was employed by the Mine Owners' association through detectives to commit crimes that were charged to the federation; that public opinion was aroused against the union miners, and that, if the Colorado evidence for the state was admitted the defense had the right to show a counter conspiracy.

State Replies.

The reply of the state was that the defense had failed legally to connect their case in any of the particulars stated, and therefore their evidence merely confused the issue.

J. M. Hawley will open the argument for the state this morning. It is expected that he will take the entire day. Mr. Richardson, for the defense, will speak Saturday.

Limits Field for Argument.

Boise, Idaho, July 21.—The field for argument, both for the prosecution and defense of William D. Haywood, has been limited by Judge Wood, who in a decision handed down yesterday removed from the consideration of the jury all evidence bearing on the alleged conspiracy by mine owners and others against the Western Federation of Miners.

Immediately after the announcement of this decision argument commenced.

Hawley Addresses the Jury.

Judge Hawley, leading counsel for the state, spoke for two hours and fifteen minutes at the afternoon session. Mr. Hawley's address was at times eloquently impassioned, but yet a plain analysis of the case. He characterized the case as the "most important ever given to a jury in the United States." He denounced the defendant and his alleged co-conspirators as the "worst band of criminals that ever infested any section of this country."

Calls Orchard's Story True.

Mr. Hawley described Orchard's story as truthful, not only because of the manner in which it was told, but because it had been corroborated in every important detail. Mr. Hawley concluded with the statement that already he had shown enough to convict, and that any juryman not willing to convict on the evidence connecting the conspirators with the blowing up of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan concentrator in 1899 and the explosion at the Vindicator mine in 1903 alone "ought only to rid himself of an unpleasant duty to his state."

Mr. Hawley will continue his argument to-day.

Life is Passed in Boise Court.

Boise, Idaho, July 23. — James H. Hawley, leading counsel for the State of Idaho, presenting the first of the arguments to the jury in the case against William D. Haywood, closed Saturday after speaking for nearly eight hours, distributed over three sessions of court.

From time to time Haywood took copious notes in a small book and frequently made suggestions to one or other of his counsel, seven of whom were in court.

Throughout the day Mr. Hawley used an almost conversational tone. The analysis of testimony in contradiction of Orchard's story concluded frequently with the denunciation of witness after witness as a willful perjurer.

Exonerates Rank and File.

Mr. Hawley's peroration was impressive. He said he did not charge that a majority, or even that many of the Western Federation of Miners were criminals, but that the evil deeds of the officers and the scum of the organization had brought discredit on the rank and file.

With the utmost deliberation the leading counsel for the state charged willful perjury against several witnesses. He argued the truth of Orchard's story and said that two men in particular might have been brought to contradict him, but that the defense was afraid to produce either Pettibone or Adams, and he said Adams had been brought to Boise from jail in Shoshone county in order that the defense might use him as a witness.

White to the lips, Clarence Darrow sprang into action.

"The statement is false and counsel knows it," he shouted.

Hawley took a step closer to the defense table and shook his finger close to Darrow's face, and said:

"When counsel says that, he utters a deliberate falsehood."

The atmosphere here was charged with danger. Sheriff Hodgins stood up alert, and his deputies drew in closer, but Judge Wood, with a sharp command and insistent warning, patched up a temporary peace.

Strong Plea for Life of Haywood.

Boise, Idaho, July 24. — For four hours and a half yesterday E. F. Richardson pleaded with the jury for the life of William D. Haywood. Under order of the court the hours for the day's sessions were changed and court met at 6 o'clock last evening.

Mr. Richardson plunged directly into the death of Gov. Steunenberg in his opening sentence.

"When the death of Gov. Steunenberg was flashed to the world there was the immediate conclusion in nearly all quarters that there was some connection between the Coeur d'Alene troubles and the bomb which was placed at his gate."

Reviews Events.

Mr. Richardson then reviewed the events following the death of Former Governor Steunenberg, saying Harry Orchard was caught almost red-handed in the act. A Pinkerton detective came to Idaho and soon had a confession from a man who, to save his own worthless neck was ready to place the blame upon others. The matter was taken up by that portion of the press which depends upon the prosperous and capitalistic classes, and the leaders of the Western Federation of Miners were adjudged guilty without a hearing.

The attorney begged the jurors to lay aside any impression they may have formed from reading the newspapers during the last year and to start with him at the beginning of the case and go through the various events one by one, without feeling or prejudice.

Not Connected With Orchard.

The contention of the defense, Mr. Richardson declared, was that no connection has been shown between Orchard and the defendant.

Mr. Richardson, as he proceeded with his argument, reviewed all the principal points in the case, and declared that neither the defendant nor any of his associates was connected in any way with the crimes with which they are charged.

Attorney Flays the Pinkertons.

Boise, Idaho, July 25. — Forsaking the theory of vengeance as Orchard's motive for the murder of Former Governor Steunenberg, E. F. Richardson argued that Orchard was in the employ of the Pinkerton Detective agency when he killed Steunenberg and that the murder was a part of a conspiracy to hang Haywood. This sudden departure was followed by a tremendous denunciation of Capt. James McParland and the Pinkertons and passionate vituperation of Orchard, Gov. Gooding of Idaho, Senator Borah, Gov. Peabody of Colorado and all who have acted on the side of the prosecution of Haywood came in for a share of the avalanche of Mr. Richardson's peroration.

Calls It Pinkerton Plot.

Mr. Richardson denounced and charged the Pinkerton detective agency with a systematic plot to secure the conviction of Haywood, Moyer and Pettibone as a means to the desired extermination of the Western Federation of Miners. Clarence Darrow will commence his argument in Haywood's behalf this morning. It is expected he will require two days to close for the defense.

Perjury Charge Does Not Hold.

Dr. I. L. McGee, the witness for the defense, who was arrested, charged with perjury, was discharged yesterday by the magistrate before whom the preliminary hearing was held. The justice ruled that the evidence was insufficient to hold McGee.

ST. PAUL MAN KILLED BY CARS.

Charles McKissick Meets With Accident at Frazee.

St. Paul, July 21.—Charles McKissick of the live stock firm of McKissick Bros., South St. Paul, was instantly killed by a train at Frazee at 5 o'clock yesterday morning. From information received at South St. Paul he was on the way to catch a local train for Detroit and was struck by the flyer, coming in an opposite direction. Death was instantaneous.

Set of Tools in His Leg.

Deadwood, S. D., July 21.—Henry Anderson has for many months been troubled with his leg. Finally he became unable to walk and consulted doctors, who decided to perform an operation. The leg was cut open and the doctors took out a chisel, a couple of nails, a screwdriver, some chunks of wood and a piece of tin. Anderson recalled that several years ago he was the victim of a premature explosion while digging a ditch, but he was ignorant of what his leg was carrying.

SENATOR BORAH IS SENSATIONAL

BEGINS CLOSING ARGUMENT FOR PROSECUTION IN HAYWOOD CASE.

NO IMMUNITY FOR ORCHARD

SENATOR IS MOST DRAMATIC IN DISCLAIMING ANY SUCH INTENTION.

Boise, Idaho, July 27.—The case of the State of Idaho against William D. Haywood, charged with the murder of Frank D. Steunenberg, will rest with the jury by night. Clarence Darrow, after speaking for eleven hours, concluded the final plea for Haywood's life at 4:20 p. m., and at 7 in the evening Senator Borah opened the closing argument for the prosecution. He will speak for three sessions, or about seven hours. Judge Wood will charge the jury Saturday morning.

At least 1,000 people were unable to find seats in the court room last night.

Governor's Widow Present.

Aside from the unusually large crowd in the court room and the large number of women present, the scene was much as it has been at each of the sessions during the last eleven weeks. Mrs. Steunenberg, the widow of the murdered governor, was in the court room for the first time. She occupied a seat inside the railing, beside her youngest son.

Senator Borah's speech was a sensation. From time to time he turned on counsel for the defense, fierce denunciation pouring from his lips, and at times he brought protests from Richardson and Darrow, but with blazing eyes and hot words he silenced every effort to break the rush of words.

No Immunity for Orchard.

The climax was, when in behalf of the State of Idaho, its people, its governor and himself, he disclaimed all intention or desire to give immunity to Orchard. Finally, his face pale and voice quivering with emotion, the senator raised his arm and said:

"If I should ever join in an attempt to give immunity to this man I hope the great God may wither my right arm in its socket."

ENGINE BUTTS INTO MAN.

He Is Hurled Fifty Feet and Escapes Without Broken Bones.

Waseca, Minn., July 27.—A man giving his name as Nelson was struck by the north-bound local on the Minneapolis & St. Louis railroad near New Richland and thrown about fifty feet. He was brought to this city in a supposedly serious condition and taken to Dr. Cumming's office. An examination revealed a good many bruises, but no broken bones. After his wounds were dressed the young fellow got up and walked to the depot.

Bolt Kills Young Sheep Herder.

Great Falls, Mont., July 27. — Another lightning fatality is reported from the Holliday ranch, twelve miles northwest of Cascade. A young ranch hand known only as "Bob" was driving a band of sheep to the shearing sheds when a storm came up. There was a flash of lightning and the man fell dead.

Creamery Is Burned.

Black River Falls, Wis., July 27. — The creamery owned by Lund Bros., in the town of Garfield, has been destroyed by fire at a loss of $2,500, with $1.500 insurance. A deal was nearly completed by which it was to become a farmers' co-operative company, but the plant probably will not be rebuilt.

Car Strikes Boy on Coaster.

Toledo, Iowa, July 27.—While coasting down Connell hill in a coaster wagon, Roy Bridge, eleven years old, ran in front of a street car and received injuries which will result in his death. The boy was caught under the wheels and dragged for some distance before the car could be stopped.

Poisoned Dog Biscuit Kills Child.

Albia, Iowa, July 27.—A bit of dog biscuit poisoned with strychnine caused the death of the infant child of Charles Mich of Russell yesterday. The child was playing in the yard when it found the piece of biscuit and ate it. Its death, in awful agony, followed soon afterwards.

Fifth Drowning in Two Weeks.

Houghton, Mich., July 27.—Edward Klotz, twelve years old, was drowned yesterday at Huron dam, near here. This makes the fifth drowning in this district in two weeks, all due to cramps while the victims were swimming.

WOMAN IS VICTIM OF PLOT

SAYS HER ARREST IS DUE TO FEARS OF LOOTERS OF RED MEN.

Helena, Mont., July 27.—Miss Helen Pierce Gray, accused of obtaining money under false pretenses, who was bound over at Billings to await the action of the grand jury, and who is now in jail here because of inability to furnish $1,500 bond, in a sensational interview yesterday charges that the real motive of her arrest is to bring discredit on her story of graft, loot and robbery of the red men.

Miss Gray asserts that she came West last October to write up the Crow Indian fair for a New York magazine. Government officials, a state senator and a prominent live stock men are charged with being parties to her arrest.

As a result of her trip west last fall, she says she unearthed many scandals which she told personally to President Roosevelt and Secretary Garfield.

She admits that she received $450 from the Indians, but says that it was with the understanding that it was to defray her expenses on the Washington trip to set matters before the officials. Her chief charge is that the Crow reservation opening was tainted with fraud, by which a railroad, a townsite company, several well known stockmen and government officials were to profit.

She declares that the Crows were robbed of $1,600,000 through forgery. Miss Gray also declares she has ample evidence to support her charges. She will publish her story soon, with all of the names, she says.

THE STATE DAY BY DAY

News of Interest.

FIRST RAIL TRIP IN 38 YEARS.

When Tar Anchors Far Inland He Stays Long in Port.

Among the numerous pioneers who assembled at the annual reunion of the Otter Tail County Old Settlers' association this summer, few if any have had a more interesting career than that of Ragnor Kalling, a man who spent twelve years in constant travel, and thirty-eight years without taking a rail trip. Mr. Kalling was born in Sweden in 1840, and at the age of seventeen years shipped as a sailor aboard a merchant vessel engaged in the Brazilian trade.

RAGNOR KALLING

Of Otter Tail county, who as a sailor sees the world and then casts anchor in Minnesota.

Mr. Kalling remained in the Brazilian trade for three years, and then spent several years in the Mediterranean and the East Indian trade. All in all, he crossed the equator twelve times, and as there was no Suez canal in those days he has been three times around the Cape of Good Hope.

His last voyage carried him as far east as the island of Java, and the vessel, on which he was sailing as second mate, took on a cargo of tobacco and coffee there. The voyage occupied 163 days, and on the return journey the ship was run down and dismantled by a French vessel in what was known to the sailors as the "Spanish sea," outside the Bay of Biscay. The captain and first mate, believing that the vessel would quickly sink, boarded the Frenchman and were taken to St. Thomas, but Mr. Kalling, as second mate, maintained that it would float, and with a part of the crew determined to stay with the ship and make the nearest port. This port was Falmouth, England, and after two days of partial sailing and partial drifting they landed safely in the harbor. Another boat was sent out from Rotterdam and towed the dismantled vessel to that port.

Meantime Mr. Kalling's brother had located in Minnesota, and had been writing glowing descriptions of the beauties of this state and its matchless possibilities. These letters induced him to visit Minnesota, and his marriage, which took place in St. Paul, was the determining factor in making him a landsman during the balance of his career. His bride had come from Sweden and met him there, and the couple settled first in Meeker county, but remained there only a short time, and on May 21, 1870, arrived in Otter Tail county, which ever since has been their family home. Mr. Kalling came here in a covered wagon, drawn by an ox team, and from the time he landed in Meeker county to the time he started from Fergus Falls to Underwood to attend the Old Settlers' association, a few days ago, he never boarded a train. He simply had no wish to travel.

On arriving in Fergus Falls he took a homestead just outside that city, and was elected assessor for that locality. While holding that office he assessed the first logs that were brought to the sawmill, which at that time marked the site of the future city of Fergus Falls. He has held practically all of the other township offices from time to time, and was the second judge of probate of the county. An Indian outbreak was feared during Gov. Austin's term of office, and a militia company was hastily organized at Fergus Falls. Gov. Austin appointing Mr. Kalling its captain and consigning him sixty stands of arms. He also holds a sea captain's commission.

PREMIUMS ARE LIBERAL.

State Fair Association Hangs Up $70,000 to Be Won.

As it is considered probable that 50,000 people will attend the coming Minnesota state fair, which is to be held Sept. 2 to 7, the occasion will be a great one in which to exhibit the products of the Northwest, both agricultural and manufactured. The various superintendents of divisions are receiving many applications for space in the buildings, and entries of horses, cattle, swine, sheep, poultry, grains, vegetables and flowers, all to compete for the premiums offered by the state fair management.

About $43,000 are offered in the ordinary premium list, while $27,(000 additional will be given in purses for the great races, making in all $70,000 to be disbursed to persons having animals or farm products of superior quality. In most of the animal divisions entries close on Aug. 15.

Special interest will attach this year to the exhibits of poultry and poultry-house supplies and apparatus, which will be shown in the new poultry building, the largest in the United States. Even more interest will be shown in the dairy building, which is also the largest of its class, and which will not only contain a very elaborate assortment of dairy and creamery apparatus and supplies, but will have a refrigerator ninety feet long, in which there will be a tub of butter from every creamery in the state.

RULES ADOPTED.

Board of Control Tells How to Settle Dispute Over Poor.

The state board of control has power under the revised laws to decide as to the residence of poor persons who are charges on counties or towns. Under the law, the board has adopted rules for getting evidence when there is a dispute as to residence.

Any county or town having a charge that it claims to be a resident elsewhere is to file a petition with the board. A copy will be sent by the board's secretary to the other party in the controversy, to be known as the respondent. It must file an answer in twenty days, and the petitioner will have another twenty days to reply. Either party may on request have twenty days to prepare a written argument, after which the board will decide where the person in question properly belongs.

MILKING CONTEST.

Interesting Feature at the State Fair This Year.

An interesting milking contest will take place at the Minnesota state fair under the new competition offered in connection with the national display of Shorthorn cattle by the American Shorthorn Breeders' association. The contest is open to two classes of cows, those under three years old and those over that age. The sum of $200 is put up in premiums.

On the first morning of the show all cows are to be milked in the ring in the presence of the judge, who shall also see each animal's milk weighed, and shall be done for three consecutive days, morning and evening, at hours to be fixed by the superintendent.

Masked at Church.

Two sisters, one 15 the other 17, have been charged at Olmutz, with offending the public feeling of reverence by going to church in masks. In defense, they protested that they meant no harm. They had been at a masked ball till five o'clock in the morning, and had slipped into the church just as they were. The court delivered judgment to the effect that the accused were certainly guilty, but meant no harm. They were, therefore, acquitted.

CONTRACTORS PUSH WORK.

New Buildings at State Fair Ground Are Being Rushed.

The enormous amount of improvement work now under way on the Minnesota state fair grounds is making satisfactory progress and Secretary C. N. Cosgrove said that everything will be in perfect shape for the fair, which opens on Sept. 2.

The contractors who are erecting the poultry building have the walls practically completed and are putting in roof timbers. The dairy building is not so far advanced, but the walls are well up and there is no doubt that both these buildings will be finished by Aug. 15, the date set by the contracts. At the manufacturers' building annex roofers are at work and the interior work is being done.

A large crew of men is at work on the sewer system for the grounds, and heaps of dirt and piles of drain pipe may be seen in all directions along the avenues. The pumping station at the southwest corner of the grounds is well under way. From this plant the sewage will be pumped through a wrought iron pipe more than a mile long to connect with the St. Paul sewer system.

Another large crew is erecting a wire fence around the new forty-acre purchase and along the east side of the fair grounds where the old fence requires replacing.

Carpenters have the new bleachers in hand and are making good progress with the heavy timbering which will support the seats. These bleachers will have a seating capacity of 5,000. Still another gang is overhauling and partially rebuilding the main grandstand.

DAKOTA AS TO FLOUR MILLS.

State Labor Bureau to Begin Compilation Aug. 1.

Statistics relating to the flour mills and the flour milling industry of the state will be compiled by the state labor bureau. The work will be taken up immediately after Aug. 1, but as there are between 300 and 400 flour mills in Minnesota, it will take some time to gather complete statistics.

The purpose of the labor department is to get as full information as possible in regard to the ownership of the different mills, the investment in each, character of work done, method of operation, number of employes, disposition of product with reference to foreign or domestic consumption, beside the character of the machinery and other equipment and conditions of labor. At present there are no such statistics.

Of the total number of flour mills in the state, about twenty-seven, including practically all of the largest ones, are in Minneapolis.

Early in the fall the labor department will begin a compilation of statistics regarding the canneries of Minnesota, which have grown very rapidly in number in the past few years. In 1900 there were but four canneries in this state, and none of them was large enough to be considered of great importance among the state's industries. In 1904 the number of canneries had been increased to sixteen, and at present there are about thirty.

CHAUTAUQUA IS SUCCESSFUL.

Three Senators Appear at the Worthington (Minn.) Session.

The second annual Worthington chautauqua closed after a session of eleven days. It was successful in every way, the weather being the finest, the attendance large and the program well selected.

Senator Dolliver of Iowa spoke to an audience of about 2,500 people. He took issue with portions of Senator La Follette's address which was delivered here July 5, and inferentially paid his compliments to Senator Tillman for his utterances and profession upon the race question.

The new amphitheater erected this year at a cost of about $3,000 was repeatedly crowded to overflowing by large audiences. The Chautauqua association, after cleaning up all indebtedness, has something like $1,000 ahead. Next year's meeting will find better and improved accommodations.

A Hutchinson creamery has just finished filling a contract for 100,000 pounds of butter for the United States navy. Long of the bureau of animal industry has been here to inspect the butter for the government, and an expert chemist, packer and weigher also have been constantly at work watching the preparation of the butter. The butter is sealed in three-pound tin cans and will keep for many months.

LIFE INSURANCE ACTIVITY.

The New York Life's Business Nearly Up to the Legal Limit.

The New York Life Insurance Company announces that its new paid business during the half year just ended was over seventy million dollars. As the new law allows no life company to write over one hundred and fifty millions per year, it would appear that this company is working early up to the limit. The New York Life gained such headway before the law was passed and suffered so little, comparatively, from the Armstrong investigation, that the question with its management has been how to keep business down to the limit, rather than how to reach it. No other company is writing nearly as much as the law allows. The New York Life has evidently become a preferred company.

The company's payments to policy holders during the six months ending June 30 were $21,660,761. It is interesting to note that this amount was almost equally divided between payments under policies maturing by death and payments made to living policy holders. Thus, while death-claims were $11,180,626, the amount paid for matured endowments, annuities, trust fund installments, for purchased policies and for dividends was $10,480,135. Modern life insurance, as practiced by the best companies, embraces a wide field, and covers many contingencies. It is money saved for the aged, as well as money provided for the families of those who die prematurely.

ULTIMATE FATE OF FISH.

They Never Die a Natural Death, Says an Observant Fisherman.

"Fish never die a natural death," said an old fisherman who has observed as he fished. "If they did bodies of dead fish would be floating on the surface of the water about all the while, because such bodies if unmolested would have to float.

"I mean, of course, fish in nature never die a natural death, not fish in captivity. And perhaps it should not be called natural death that fish in captivity die. Their environment induces mortality that fish in their native habitat would escape, and these causes might be properly classed as among the accidents that carry the captive fish off.

"If fish in their native element were never molested I believe they would never die. If they had sufficient food, which would be impossible if they no longer preyed on one another, there would be no reason for their dying. It was to prevent such uninterrupted tenure of life that all fish were made fiercely predatory, if not remorselessly cannibalistic, as many kinds are.

"A fish's life is a constantly strenuous one and one entirely selfish. A fish lives only to eat and to avoid being eaten."

International Observatory.

The International observatory on the summit of the Monte Rosa perched at a height of 15,200 feet, is completed, and will be opened soon. The construction of the observatory, which is the highest in the world, is due to the generosity of Queen Margherita of Italy, who, it is said, will attempt the ascent of the Monte Rosa in order to open the building.

Slow Development There.

Northeast Australia develops very slowly. Farmers grow maize in the old-fashioned way. The maize crop in Queensland this year is a record one. Canning pineapples is becoming an important industry in Queensland. Opal mining is growing steadily.

Our Annual Sugar Consumption.

The American sweet tooth during the past year consumed 6,300,000,000 pounds of sugar valued at $300,000,000. This is seventy-six pounds per year for every resident.

MEAT OR CEREALS.

A Question of Interest to All Careful Persons.

Arguments on food are interesting. Many persons adopt a vegetarian diet on the ground that they do not like to feel that life has been taken to feed them, nor do they fancy the thought of eating dead meat.

On the other hand, too great consumption of partly cooked, starchy oats and wheat or white bread, pastry, etc., produces serious bowel troubles, because the bowel digestive organs (where starch is digested), are overtaxed and the food ferments, producing gas, and microbes generate in the decayed food, frequently bringing on peritonitis and appendicitis.

Starchy food is absolutely essential to the human body. Its best form is shown in the food "Grape-Nuts," where the starch is changed into a form of sugar during the process of its manufacture. In this way, the required food is presented to the system in a pre-digested form and is immediately made into blood and tissue, without taxing the digestive organs.

A remarkable result in nourishment is obtained; the person using Grape-Nuts gains quickly in physical and mental strength. Why in mental? Because the food contains delicate particles of Phosphate of Potash obtained from the grains, and this unites with the albumen of all food and the combination is what nature uses to rebuild worn out cells in the brain. This is a scientific fact that can be easily proven by ten day's use of Grape-Nuts. "There's a Reason." Read, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

OFFICIAL PAPER RED LAKE FALLS CITY

It doesn't pay to be n bng, nnd it is high time St. Paul was discovering this fact.

THE Buffalo Lake News man announces that "fifty country newspapers have suspended publication in the last six months and half a hundred more are on the verge of the grave."

THE St. Peter Free Press suggests that "an extra session of legislature would be acceptable to St. Paul, for it would mean a four month's session, as a matter of course, and incidentally an expenditure in the saintly city of several hundred thousand dollars."

THE St. Paul newspapers are entering a protect because all of the employees of the new immigration bureau are from the country. It is not good taste for St. Paul to register a kick. They have the capitol and an army of state officials—three times as many as would be their share if a proper geographical diviion was made.

THE Northfield News gives this excellent advice: "If you expect other people to trade at home, remember to set the proper example. If you are a merchant don't expect to convince your customers that trading at home is a virtue if you are using an outside brand of any article of the same kind manufactured in your own town and giving employment to home labor."

THE staid old Pioneer Press is undergoing a metamorphosis. Jim Hill's holdings in the paper have been purchased by a company headed by Tams Bixby, once the leader of the Republican machine, and Mr. Bixby is to be the manager of the paper. On the theory that "a new broom sweeps clean," we may expect some notable improvement in St. Paul's morning newspaper.

INSPIRED by the happiness which is gained from living on a farm, the Fergus Falls Press waxes eloquent:

"Not even Rockefeller or Morgan at their residences in New York, can surround themselves with the genuine comforts and beauty that cluster about the homes of prosperous farmers. They can't get such sweet, fresh milk and cream, such pure undefiled butter, such honest wholesome bread, such appetizing vegetables and fruit as the best farmers have in abundence. In short, life is most worth living in the country."

THE Haywood jury did not perpetrate a surprise when it brought in a verdict of acquittal. The evidence was wholly circumstantial, and the attempt of the state to make a hero out of Orchard was damaging to the prosecution. Moyer and Pettibone, against whom the evidence is admittedly weaker than against Haywood, will likely be set free without trial.

THERE is some thoughtless and unfair critizism of the Minnesota supreme court indulged in by the public press, and from the source of these aspersions it is easy to believe that personal pique and spite furnishes the controlling power. THE GAZETTE is not among those who believe that courts and judges are sacred and above reproach, but it does believe that the integrity of the judiciary should not be questioned for light and trivial reasons. If we lose faith in the highest court of the state it is a long step toward a general dissatisfaction with our system of government, and might lead to disorder and disaster. Notwithstanding the fact that politics plays altogether too important a part in the selection of judges, Minnesota has been fortunate generally in choosing good lawyers and able jurists. Let us guard carefully the belief that our courts are honest—at least until it can be clearly substantiated that the reverse is true.

STATE FAIR OF '07.

The Forty-eight Annual Show on September 2nd.

With many new buildings, great changes on the grounds, wonderful improvements in lighting and sanitation, and a large area added to its exhibition space, the Minnesota State Fair will this year indeed be the "greatest fair in America."

The fair is to open Monday, Sept. 2nd, (Labor Day) and continue thru the week, closing on Saturday Sept. 7th. Unusual efforts have been put forth by the managers to make the fair a success and even at this early date very largely increased exhibits have been assured in all divisions of the fair.

The opening of the mammoth live stock amphitheater last year attracted the attention of stockmen all over the country and they are coming in great numbers this year to show their animals in the best equipped stock division of any fair in the country.

The new dairy building is an adequate structure to represent the enormous dairy interests of the state. Near is the new Poultry Hall—the largest building for the exhibition of poultry in the world. A new manufacturers building will supplement the one erected a few years ago. The grand stand has been rebuilt and made perfectly safe and new bleachers accommodating 5000 more people have been erected. The new sewer system and perfect comfort stations make the grounds perfectly sanitary.

At night the grounds and buildings will blaze with electric lights and races under arc lights and wonderful pyrotechnics in connection with "The Seise of Jericho" spectacle will furnish magnificent amusement.

A mammoth airship will sail about the grounds daily and visit each city in turn. The races will be of the finest and will be pulled off amid absolutely clean surroundings,

Dan Patch will appear again on Monday in an endeavor to break his record made last year, when he reduced the world's record for a harness horse to 1:55. On Thursday, Sweet Maria, the champion trotting mare will go against her record of 2:02. Saturday will be automobile day. A hundred other amusement features will fill up the programs and there will be something doing every hour of the six days.

B. F. Nelson is president of the fair and C. N. Cosgrove, secretary. The fair grounds are located midway between St. Paul and Minneapolis and easily accessible from each city by electric cars.

Back From Honeymoon.

The Warren Register of last week contains the following notice of the marriage of a young couple well known to Red Lake Falls people:

Mr. S. J. Swanson, the genial manager of the Red Lake Falls Milling Co.'s elevator and lumber business at Luna, was married at Minneapolis on June 23, to Miss Nora L. Dargan, an esteemed lady of Wylie, Red Lake county, Minn. After the ceremony the happy couple started on a five weeks honeymoon trip, which included a delightful steam boat ride on the Mississippi to St. Louis, Mo., and visits to several of Minnesota's beautiful lakes in the vicinity of Atwater. Mr. and Mrs. Swanson arrived in this city on Monday and have been busy since receiving the congratulation of friends. Mrs. Swanson is a niece of E. Dady, of this city. They will make their home here for the next two months or until the company will have completed the new house which it is building for them at Luna.

Fined For Killing Moose.

Storvall Thompson, a farmer and trapper of Middle River, Marshall Co. was arrested Sunday last and taken to Warren where he was fined $50 and costs, which were very heavy, for killing a cow moose.

Game Warden Munch of Crookston secured the evidence against him the first week in July the cow moose having been killed June 22. The chain of evidence was completed, the spot having been located where the moose was shot, traced to where it had been dragged to the woods and dressed and 160 strips of meat located in a smoke house where it was being cured. The hide had been hidden and the head had been eaten by the wolves, but not until it had been seen by several people.

Thompson refused to plead guilty and County Attorney Brown sent Sheriff Forsberg of Warren after him last Thursday and he was taken to Warren where he was fined.

Notice to Canadian Subscribers.

A recent ruling of the Canadian postal department requires that every copy of THE GAZETTE sent to subscribers residing in Canada bear a one cent stamp. This increase in the postal rates and the labor involved in affixing the stamps makes an increase in the subscription list to Canada subscribers necessary. After this date renewals and new subscriptions to be sent to Canada post offices will be charged at a rate of $1.50 per year.—Editor.

CROP CONDITIONS IN WESTERN CANADA

Lateness of Spring Overcome by Excellent Growing Summer Season.

Once more the farmers of Western Canada rest at ease and grow rich while they slumber. Their season of anxiety is over. For a time it looked as though a backward season was for once going to prevent the western country from maintaining its preeminent position as leader of the grain growing countries of the world. The unusual lateness of the spring coupled with the rapid advance in the price of foodstuffs gave the pessimists some reason for their gloomy forebodings. And among even the optimistic Westerners imbued as they usually ore with a spirit of buoyancy and hope, there commenced to glimmer a fear that perhaps this year their sanguine expectations were not to be realized. On May day when a large proportion of wheat had usually been sowa there was this year very little seeding done. Finally, however, winter which bad tarried so late in the lap of spring in all parts of the Continent vanished before the vertical rays of the sun, and the hurry and bustle of spring work commenced on the western prairies.

By the 20th of May 85% of the spring wheat was sown and the fall wheat in the districts devoted to its cultivation was covering the fields with a mantle of green. Wheat sowing finished on May 30 and by June 10 the coarser grains were also in the ground. The heavy snowfall during the winter left the ground in excellent shape when once seeding operations commenced and from the tima weather conditions permitted tha commencement of work until ploatiag was completed, the farmers were a husy class. The area in wheat is not much larger than last year, but oats, barley and flax ore much in excess of past records, the farmers deemiag it wiser on account of the loteness of the season to put in a heavier proportion of the coarser grains. From tho most reliable reports to haad it appears that the ecreage as compared with 1906 will show an increase of 12% in oats, 19% in barley and 13% lo flax.

Around Akotoks, High River, Nanton, Claresholm and other winter wheat centers, if the present weather conditions continue, tbe winter wbeat will be in head by the middle of July.

The backword weather in the early part of Moy allowed tho newly sown grain to get a firm root in the ground, and now with an ahundaace of moisture and warm weolher tho growth ie remorkable. All danger of injury from droughts is practically over as tho green crop covers tbo groud retaining tho moisture required for its growth ood preventing tho too rapid evaporatloa which might otherwisa take place.

Crops in Weetern Canade matura io ooe hundred days of good weather, and as tho weather conditions have been ideal sinco seeding, and witb spring wheat now from 14 to 18 iaches abovo the ground, n full nverasga crop is confidently expected.

In additioa to tha choering prospects of this year's yield tba farmers are to be congrotulated oo the fact that they still have in their possession five million bushels of wheat from last year's crop which they ara now disposing of at high prices.

The splendid yield of 90,000,000 bushels of wheat raised in 1906 in the three proviaces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan nnd Alberta, together with the almost certain ossuranca thnt thie year will sec n considerahle lacrease, is as in the past, ealling the atteation of the world of the "Last Beet West," and thousands from the United States nod the agriculturel districts of Europe are each month securing free grant lands or purehasiag farms in the land which has proved itself peerless omong the grain growing couutries of the world.

No Nurses for the Navy.

Surgeon General Rixey has ealled attention to the curions fact that tha navy, unlike the army, has no reguior corps of troined nurses, ond at the next session of congress he will urge the necessary appropriation for the organization of a nurse corps. With $15,000 he feels that he ean make a respectable beginning in the organization of the proposed corps.

SISTER ROSE.

BY WILKIE COLLINS

Tbe look of him, as he turned his gbastly face towards the audience, silenced and steadied tbem in an instant, just as tbey wera oo the point of faliiag into fresb confusion. Everyone stretched forward eogerly to hear what he would say. His lips moved; but tbo few words that fell from them were ineudible, except to the persons who happeaed to be close by him. Having epokeo, he left the table, supported by a police-agent, who was seen to lead him towards the private door of tha court and, consequently, also towards the prisoner's platform. He stopped, however, half way, quickly turned his face from the prisoners, and pointing towards tbe public door ot the opposite side of the hall, caused himself to be led out iato the air hy that direction. Wben he had goae, the president, addressing himself portly to Trudaine aad partly to the audience, said:

"The Citizen-superintendent Danville has been overcome hy the heat in tha court. He has retired (hy my desire, uader the care of a police-agent) to recover in the open air; pledging himself to me to come hack and throw a new light on the extraordinary and suspicious statement which the prisoner has just mnde. Until the return of Citizen Danville, I ordered the accused, Trudaioe, to suspend ony further acknowledgment of complicity which ha may have to nddress to me. Tbis matter must be cleared up before other matters are eatcrcd on. Meanwhile, in order that tbe time of the tribunal may not be wasted, I authorize the female prisoner to toke this opportunity of making any statement concerning herself which she may wish to eddress to the judgee."

"Sileaca him!" "Remove him out of court!" "Gag him!" "Guillotina him!" These cries rose from tha nudience the moment the president had dona speaking. They wera all directed at Trudaine, who had mada a last desperate effort to persuada bis sister to keep silence, and bad been detected in the attempt by the spectators.

"If tbe prisoner speaks another word to his sister, remove him," said the president, addressing the guard round tha platform.

"Good! We shall hear her at last. Silence! Silence!" exclaimed the women, settling themselves comfortably on their benches, and preparing to resume their work.

"Rose Danville, the court is waiting to hear you," seid tba president, crossing his legs and leaning back luxuriously in his large arm-chair.

CHAPTER XIV.

AMID all tha noisa and confusion of the last few minutes, Rose had stood ever in the same attitude, with that strongely fixed expression never altering on her face but once. When her husbond made his way to the side of tbe table, and stood there prominently alone, her lips trembled a little, and a faint shade of color possed ewiftly over her cheeks. Even that elight change bad vanished now—ehe was paler, etiller, more widely altered from her former self than ever, as she faced the president and said these words:

"I wish to follow my brother'e example, and make my confession es he has mode his. I would rather he had spoken for me; hut he ie too generous to say any words exeept such as be thinks may save me from sharing his punishment. I refuse to be saved, unless he is saved witb me. Where he goes when he leaves this place, I will go; what be suffers, I will suffer; if he is to die, I believe God will grant me the strength to die resignedly witb him!"

She paused for a moment, and halfturned toward Trudaine—then checked herself instantly, and went on: "This is whet I now wish to say, as to my shore in the offense charged against my hrother: Some time ago, be told me one day that he had seen my husband's mother in Paris disguised as a poor woman; thot he had spoken to her, and forced her to acknowledge herself. Up to this time we had all felt certain that she had left Frnnce, beceuse she held old-fashioned opinions, which it is dengerous for people to hold now—had left France before we came to Paris. Sbe told my brother that she hnd indeed gone (with an old tried servant of the family to help and protect her) es far os Marseilles; and that, finding unforeseen difficulty there in getting farther, she had taken it as a warning from Providence not to desert her son, of whom she was very passionately fond, and from whom she bad heen most unwilling to depart. Instead of waiting in exile for quieter times, she determined to go and hide herself in Paris, knowiag her son was going there too. She asaumed the name of her old and faithful servant, who declined to the last to leave ber unprotected; and she proposed to live in the strictest secrecy and retirement, watching, unknown, tha career of her son, and ready at a moment'a notice to disclose herself to him, when the settlement of public affairs might reunite her safely to her beloved child. My brother thought this plan full of danger, both for herself, for her son, and for the honest old man who wae risking his head for hia mistress' sake. I thought so too; and in nn evil hour I said to Louis, 'Will you try in secret to get my husband's mother away, and see that her faithful servant makes her reolly leave France this tima?' I wrongly asked my brotber to do this for a selfish reason of my own—a reason connected with my married life, which had not been a happy one. I had not succeeded in goining my husband's affection, and was not treated kindly by him. My hrotber, wbo has always loved me far more dearly I am afraid than I have ever deserved; my brother increased hie kindness to me, seeing me treated unkindly hy my husband. Tbis made ill-blood between them. My thought, when I aeked my hrother to do this for me what I have said, wse, that if we two in secret saved my husband'e mother, without danger to him, from imperiling hereelf and her son, we should, when the time ceme for speaking of what we had done, appear to my hushand in a new and better light. I should have shown how well I deserved his love, and Louis would have ehown how well he deserved his brother-in-law's gratitude; and so we ehould have made home bappy at lost, and all three have lived together affectionately. This was my thought; and when I told it to my brother, and asked him if there would be much risk, out of his kindness and indulgence toward me he said 'No!' He had so used me to accept sacrifices for my heppiness, that I let him endanger himself to help me in my little household plan. I repent this bitterly now; I ask his pardon with my whole heart. If he is acquitted, I will try to show myself worthier of hie love. If he is found guilty, I too will go to the ecaffold, and die with my hrother, who risked his life for my sake."

Sha ceased ae quietly as she had begun, and turned once more to her brother.

As she looked away from the court and looked at him, a few tears came into her eyes, and eomething of the old softness of form and gentleness of expression seemed to return to her face. He let her take hie hand, hut he seemed purposely to avoid meeting the anxioue gaze she fixed on him. His head sunk on hie breast; ha drew hie breath beavily; his countenance darkened and grew distorted, ae if he were euffering some sharp pang of pbysical pain. He hent down a little, and, leaning his elbow on the rail before him, covered his face with hie hand; and so quelled the rieing agony, so forced hack the sceldiug tears to his heart. The audience had heard Rose in silence, and they preserved the same tranquility when ehe had done. This was a rare tribute to a prisonsr from the people of the Reign of Terror.

The president looked round at his colleagues, and sbook his head suspiciously.

"This etatement of the female prisoner complicates the matter very seriously," said he. "Is there anyhody in the court," he added, looking at the persons behind his chair, "who knows where the mother of Superintendent Danville and the servant are now?"

Lomaque came forward at the appeal, and placed himself by the table.

"Why, citizen agent!" continued the president, looking hard nt him, "are you overcome hy the heat, too?"

"The fit scemed to take him, citizen-president, when the femsle prisoner had made an end of her statement," explained Magloire, pressing forward officiously.

Lomaque gave his suhordinate a look which sent tbe man hack directly to the shelter of the official group; then sold, in lower tones than were customery with him:

"I have received information relative to the mother of Superintendent Danville and the servant, and am ready to answer any questions that mey be put to me."

"Where are they now?" asked the president.

"She and the servant are known to have crossed the frontier, and are supposed to be on their way to Cologne. But since they have entered Germany, their whereabouts is necessarily a metter of uncertainty to tbe republican authoritiee."

"Have you any information relative to the conduct of the old servant while he was in Paris?"

"I havs information enough to prove that he was not en object for political suspicion. He seems to have been simply animated hy servile zeal for the woman's interests; to have performed for her all the menial offices of a servant in private; and to have misled the neighbors hy affected equality witb her in public."

"Have you any reason to believe that Superintendent Dnnville was privy to his mother's first attempt at escaping from France?"

"I infer it from what the female prisoner haa said, and for other reasons which it would be irregulor to detail before the tribunal. The proofs can no doubt be obtained, if I am allowed to communicate with the authorities at Lyons and Marseilles."

CHAPTER XV.

AT this moment Danville entered the court, and advancing to the table, placed himself close hy the chief-agent's side. They looked eoch other steadily in the face for an instant.

"He has recovered from the shock of Trudaine's answer," thought Lomaque, retiring. "His hand trembles, hie face is pale, but I can see regained self-possession in his eye, and I dread tha consequences already."

"Citizen-president," began Danville, "I demand to know if anything has transpired affecting my honor and patriotism in my absence?"

He spoke apparently with the most perfect calmness, but he looked nobody in the face. His eyes were fixed steadily on the green haize of the tabla heneath him.

"Tbe female prisoner has made a statement, referring principally to herself and her brother," answered tha president, "hut incidentally mentioning a previous attempt on your mother's part to break existing laws by emigrating from France. This portion of tha confession contains in it some elements of euspicion which seriously affect you——"

"Thay ehall be suspicions no longar—at my own peril I will changa them to certainties!" exclaimed Danville, extending hie arm theatrically and looking up for the first time. "Citizen-president, I avow it with the fearless frankness of a good patriot; I was privy to my mother's first attempt at eecaping from France."

Hissas and cries of execration followed this confession. He winced under them at first, but recovared hie self-possession hefora eilence was reatored.

"Citizene, you have heard the confession of my fault," he resumed, turning with desperate assurance toward tha audience; "now hear the atonement I have made for it at the altar of my country."

He waited at the end of that santence, until the secretary to the trihunal had done writing it down in the report-hook of the court.

"Transcribe faithfully to the letter!" cried Danville, pointing solemnly to the open page of the volume. "Life and death hang on my words."

The secretary took a fresh dip of ink, and nodded to show that he was ready. Danville went on:

"In these times of glory and trial for France," he proceeded, pitching his voice to a tone of deep emotion, "what are all good citizens most sacredly bound to do? To immolate their dearest private affections and interests hefore their public duties! On the first attempt of my mother to violate the laws of emigration, by escaping from Frnnce, I failed in making tha heroic sacrifice which inexorable patriotiem demanded of me. My situation wae more terrible than the eituation of Brutus sitting in judgment on his own sons. I had not the Roman fortituda to rise equal to it. I erred, citizens—erred as Coriolanus did, when his august mothar pleaded with him for the safety of Rome! For that error I deserved to ba purged out of the republican community; hut I escaped my merited punishment—nay, I even rose to tbe honor of holding an office under the governmant. Time passed; and again my mother attempted to escape from France. Again, inevitahle fate hrought my civic virtue to the test. How did I meet this second supremest trial? By an atonemant for past weakness, terrible as the trial itself! Citizens, you will shudder; but you will applaud while you tremble. Citizens, look! and while you look, remember well the evidence given at tha opening of this case. Yonder stands the enemy of his country, who intrigued to help my mother to escape; here stands the patriot son, whose voice was the first, the only voice, to denounce him for the crime!" As he spoke, he pointed to Trudaine, then struck himself on the breast, then folded his arms, and looked sternly at the henches occupied by the spectators.

"Do you assert," exclaimed the president, "that the time when you denounced Trudaine, you knew him to be intriguing to aid your mother's escape?"

"I assert it," anewered Danville.

The pen which the president held, dropped from his hand at that reply; his colleagues sterted and looked at each other in blank silence.

NON-ANIMAL BOOTS.

Featura of the Vegatarian Fad in England.

There are vegetarians who deny flesh food on sanitary grounds only, while others cling to the diet on humanitarian grounds. They refuse to eat meat because they decline to even remotely eanction the slaughter of a living creature for any purpose, saye the New York World. This feeling ie carried to the point of a fad in England, and as n result, "vegetarian hoots and shoes" are advertised as for sale in the London papers. The uppere are made of "jannus corium," which, hy the way, is oak-tanned leather, but few people will recognize the fact. This is all the leather used in the shoe, however. The soles are of closely waterproofed flax helting. The vegetarians in arguing that the skins of slaughtered animals are not necessary say that India ruhber, gutta percha, ateel, iron, and hrass nails, cashmere, cotton, elastic webbing, wood, paper, cork, straw, silk, jute and wax go to form the modern mystery of a lady's ahoe, in which oftentimes no element of leather enters.

Man-of-War's Man Takes Complaint to Head of Bureau.

"It is very seldom, remarked an official of tha navy departmant, "that the secretary of the navy receives a eall from a man-of-war'a man, hut secretary Metcolf had that experience recently. It was during business hours at tha department. A young hluajacket very much excited and apparently in troubla appeared in tha secratary's anter-room and asked Private Secretary Clark if he couldn't hava a private interview with the secretary on important business. Secretary Metcalf happened to be disangaged at tha time and ha said he would eea the man. Tha sailor want into the secretary's private offica and told a yarn of troubla. It seems that ha is attachad to Farragut's old flagship Hartford, now used by tha midehipmen at Annapolie ae a practica ehip, and that ha had walked from Annapolis to Washington, a distanca of ahout 40 miles, in order to lay hie grievanca bafora tha head of the naval astablishment. Acording to his etory the hluejacket was sick and couldn't get proper food on his ehip. Ha said that the doctors had pnt him on a light diet, but that ha was given nothing but regulation food, which wae too coaree for hie delicate digestion, and made him sick. Tha man was in pretty bad shape, but whether it was due to improper food or simply the result of his long tramp from Annapolie it was hard to tell. Anyhow his tale axcited Secretary Matcalf's aympathy and at his auggestion tha man wae sent to local naval hospital for treatment and observation, in addition to which the sacretary said ha would investigate his complaint of improper treatment on tha Hartford. The ease is unusual, in that tha eailor man was abla to preeant his casa to the head of the navy in person."

New in Gastronomic Line.

Epicures experience much difflculty in finding new diehes, but it took a Virginia negro in a Washington eafa the other day to introduca a distinct novelty in the gastronomic line. A belated and tired traveler got off a train at the Pennsylvania depot and headed for an eating placa which soma chance acquaintanca in tha smoker suggested. Seating himself at the table he was handed a menu card by an obsequious server of viands. On account of the dearth of waiters, dua to the exit of many for seaside and mountain resorts, tha management was put to the necessity of employing the negro referred to, who was not overburdened with either experience or intelligence. "As a matter of fact, said the traveler, in relating his experience, "the man only knew ona dish on the card. After finishing up a hasty meal of steak, fried potatoee and coffee, I asked him what elea ha had that was good, meaning dessert. 'We've got some fina orang-outang pie,' was the response. Just as a flyer I told him to get ma eome, having considerable misgivings as to what he would bring. A great uproar went up when he set before ma a piece of meringue pie. The fun wae worth tha enlarged tip I handed him, hut when I got home it'e orang-outang pia for me."

White House Fun and Jollity.

The evening visitors who sit about the "camp fire" in the president'a library do not hava altogethar a eilent tima of it, says a correspondent. Thera is their own convarsation and that of thair host, and thera ie the occasional reminder that the younger Roosevelts ara not far off. It's a good healthy noiee that comae from the hall on occasion, and tha fact that it is made by two or threa boys and a dog or two having the time of their lives in tha big hallway without makes it, in one senee at least, appealing. Tha president'e childran are like tha children of other sansibla Amarican parents. They are allowad to maka all tha noisa that they care to, provided it doesn't interfera with the comfort of othare. No visitor is worried by it, for it quits early. WOMEN WHO CHARM

Health Is the First Essential Toward Making a Woman Attractive.

MISS HULDA KUGHLER MISS ELIZABETH WYNN

There is a beauty and attractiveness in health which is far greater than mere regularity of feature.

A sickly, irritable, and complaining woman always carries a cloud of depression with her; she is not only unhappy herself but is a damper to all joy and happiness when with her family and friends.

It is the bright, healthy, vivacious woman who always charms and carries sunshine wherever she goes.

If a woman finds that her energies are flagging and that everything tires her; if her feminine system fails to perform its allotted duties, there is nervousness, sleeplessness, faintness, backache, headache, bearing-down pains, and irregularities, causing constant misery and melancholia, she should remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made from native roots and herbs will dispel all these troubles. By correcting the cause of the trouble it cures where other treatment may have failed.

Miss Elizabeth Wynn, of No. 205 8th Avenue, New York City, writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"For months I suffered with dreadful headaches, pain in the back and severe hemorrhages. I was weak and out of sorts all the time. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helped me when all other medicine had failed. It seemed to be just what I needed and quickly restored my health."

Miss Hulda Kughler, of No. 25, West 15th Street, New York City, writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"For months I was ill with an internal trouble. I suffered terrible agony, was nervous, irritable, and sick all the time. I took different medicines without benefit. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended and within six months I was completely restored to health and I want to recommend it to every suffering woman."

Women who are troubled with painful or irregular functions, backache, bloating (or flatulence), displacements, inflammation or ulceration, that bearing-down feeling, dizziness, indigestion, or nervous prostration may be restored to perfect health and strength by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound,

Mrs. Pinkham's Invitation to Women.

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. From the symptoms given, the trouble may be located and the quickest and surest way of recovery advised. Out of her vast volume of experience in treating female ills Mrs. Pinkham probably has the very knowledge that will help your case. Her advice is free and always helpful.

CUTTING DOWN EXPENSES.

The Logic of a Man Who Made Things Pay.

"At a meeting of the Oregon Short Line directors," said a Chicago broker, "E. H. Harriman made a fine speech on economy in railway management. At the end he told an appropriate story.

"He said that a keen business man bought at a low price a theater that had long been unprofitable, and by economical management put it immediately on a paying basis.

"But he was very economical. He watched the expenses with the sharpest eye.

"The first month's expense account contained the item:

"'Meat for eight cats—to protect the scenery and properties from the rats' ravages—$2.'

"The proprietor struck this item out, writing on the margin:

"'If the cats eat the rats, wherefore the meat? If they don't, wherefore the cats?'"

Changes in the Blood.

In an endeavor to determine what chemical change takes place in the blood with age two French investigators, C. Dhero and G. L. Grimme, have been examining the blood of dogs and rabbits for calcium content. It was noted that in dogs the proportion of calcium in the blood decreased regularly with age, but no generalization from this can be drawn, inasmuch as rabbits' blood did not exhibit a similar characteristic, the proportion of calcium varying greatly with individuals of the same age.

DIET AND THE COMPLEXION.

Be Careful When, What, How and How Much to Eat.

Women who want to have a good complexion should take to heart the remarks of Dr. G. H. Fox on the subject of diet and the skin. Dr. Fox declares that more complexions suffer because of overeating than from almost any other cause.

"For every patient suffering from inflammatory skin-disease who is eating too little and suffering from lack of nourishment," he says in the Journal of Cutaneous Diseases, "we meet a score or more who eat far more than they actually need and feed the eruption for which they seek relief.

"In advising our patients what to eat it is wrong to say 'Don't eat this or don't eat that,' for one might spend an hour or more in making out an expurgated diet list and still leave foods unmentioned which might if taken in excess, or at the wrong time, prove extremely detrimental. It is far better to name a few nutritious and easily digested articles. Limit the patient to these for a short time.

"It is not what a patient eats so much as it is how and when and under what circumstances he eats it that tends to the production of an inflammatory condition of the skin. Hasty eating, irregular eating and meals taken under the stress of excitement and worry are the daily experiences of many of our patients, rich and poor."

If all the world loves a lover it has a queer way of showing it at times.

RARE OLD VOLUME

UNIQUE COPY OF THE KORAN OWNED IN KANSAS CITY.

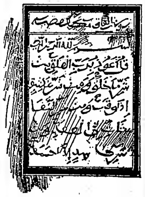
All Hand Work and Must Represent Labor of Many Years—Proof That Moro Art Was Once of High Grade.

A rare old book is owned by Frederick C. Butler of 1224 Harrison street, says the Kansas City Star. He found it in a deserted bamboo house in Sulu island while he was with the Fourteenth United States cavalry in the Philippines in 1903. It had been owned by a Moro Mohammedan priest.

The book is a copy of the Koran and is made wholly by hand. Even the paper is hand made. The binding is of thick, stiff caribou hide. Each folio is sewed with cord made from help fibers and is of an even size, showing cleverness and skill in spinning. In one place there is a little piece of smooth bamboo twisted in the cord to bring it tight when slackened from use. As for age, that cannot be denied by anyone on seeing the pages. The leaves at the beginning and end are frayed and worn and the paper throughout is yellow with age.

The most wonderful thing about the book is that every character, it being written in Arabic, was made with a stub pen or flat reed. Each page is covered on both sides with closely written characters that appear to be printed when viewed from a little distance. Around the writing is a margin of an inch or so and in this margin are single characters, display letters or characters, and sprays of tiny flowers done in color. Dispersed through the writing at irregular intervals are little circles drawn with a compass, the center picture of the needle being plain in a majority of the circles. The circles are filled with different colors and are appropriately punctuation marks.

Two pages in particular always excite wonder and admiration. They alone, of all others, show the height that Moro art had reached at the time the book was made. These pages were executed with a pen or reed as the others were, except that the writer brought a brush and gold leaf into play. The marginal design departs radically from the rest of the book and the writer made a design distinctly oriental. It looks like the border of a Bokara or Damascus rug. It is almost impossible to describe the many little painstaking curves and curlycues that he put in these two pages, the color of which is still bright and clear notwithstanding the age of it.



The Hand Illumined Koran.

When the book was found it was taken to Hadji Buto, prime minister of the sultan of Sulu, and he said of it:

"This book is a Koran, written by a Moro in Arabic many years ago. There are nowadays no people in this island can write such a book. I myself can write it; it would take me about three months. I know the Koran by heart and could write out of my memory, although it is Arabic. It must have taken that writer more than a year to finish the work. We Moros don't have a Koran in the Moro language. We read it in Arabic and the priests, or hadjis, tell us what it means in our language."

Routed by Snapping Turtles.

As John Patterson, a huckster, was driving into town from Darlington this morning he came upon a drove of 15 or 20 snapping turtles crossing the road, says a Beaver Falls correspondent of the Pittsburg Despatch. Thinking a few of them would meet with ready sale he attempted to catch them, whereupon the turtles showed fight, and, hissing angrily, made for him with outstreached heads and snapping jaws.

Patterson hastily got back into his wagon, turned his horse and beat a retreat. He says most of the turtles were as large as a washtub. He drove into town by another route.

Half of Snake Fought.

Church Barkley had a terrible battle with a monster snake a few days ago, says a Harrodsburg, Ky., dispatch. He heard a nose upstairs and went to investigate, and found a snake coiled on the bed. He fired at it with his shotgun and cut it in two. The part with the head, about three feet long, made battle and tried to bite and coil around Barkley's legs. He had to fight it out with part of the snake, and he says he never did faster kicking, but finally dispatched that part of the reptile. The entire snake measured nine feet nine inches in length, and had a horn, or some hard substance, three inchhes long, on the end of its tail.

AWFUL EFFECT OF ECZEMA.

Covered with Yellow Sores—Grew Worse—Parents Discouraged—Cuticura Drove Sores Away.

"Our little girl, one year and a half old, was taken with eczema or that was what the doctor called it. We took her to three doctors but by this time she was nothing but a yellow, greenish sore. One morning we discovered a little yellow pimple on one of her eyes. Doctor No. 3 said that we had better take her to some eye specialist, since it was an ulcer. So we went to Oswego to doctor No. 4, and he said the eyesight was gone. We were nearly discouraged, but I thought we would try the Cuticura Treatment, so I purchased a set of Cuticura Remedies, which cost me $1, and in three days our daughter, who had been sick about eight months, showed great improvement, and in one week all sores had disappeared. Of course it could not restore the eyesight, but if we had used Cuticura in time I am confident that it would have saved the eye. Mrs. Frank Abbott, R. F. D. No. 9, Fulton, Oswego Co., N. Y., Aug. 17, 1906.

How He Might Be Identified.

A man from town was calling at a farm house on business. Meeting a half-grown boy in the yard, he inquired for the farmer who lived there. "Oh, he's my dad, an' you'll find him down in the holler with the hogs. You'll know him, for he's got a hat on," was the information innocently given by the boy.

Wasp Also Enemy to Fly.

Wasps prey on flies—a fact which is well known in Italy. On a summer or early autumn day in the Tuscan country parts, when the luncheon table is blackened with flies, one may see a wasp sail in at the open window, select a fly, roll it over, curl it up and carry it out into the sunshine and soon return for another.

PRESENCE OF MIND.

The Ready Actor Who Prevented a Scene Being Spoiled.

E. H. Sothern, a few days before he set out on his London venture, talked at a farewell dinner about stage presence of mind.

"When a dilemma unexpectedly crops up," he said, "I manage, in an awkward way, to master it somehow; but I never acquit myself with the brilliance that marks the typical anecdotes of stage presence of mind.

"They tell of a really remarkable case that happened in Cincinnati. It was a melodrama. The hero in the second act stood in the bow of a ship, soliloquizing about love, while the waves rolled and rocked on all sides.

"The waves were made in this way: Blue canvas was spread loosely over the stage, and under the canvas some twenty or thirty supers lay on their backs, kicking and rolling and beating about with their arms.

"But it happened that at this performance there was a large hole in the canvas. Through the hole, as the actor talked passionately about love the head of a super suddenly protruded. The head looked about in a wild, scared way, and quick as thought the actor shouted:

"'Man overboard!'

"Then, when the head disappeared he said sadly:

"'Alas, the perils of the deep! Another poor soul gone to his last reward.'"

Reports of the American consul general at Singapore confirm the story story of discovery of a cure for the opium habit in the leaf of a certain plant which is boiled in water and the residuum drunk. A New Kind of Bread.

The Germans are said to be making a new kind of bread of wheat or rye for which the grain goes through a process similar to malting. It is said to have a delicate flavor and by reason of the process is more easily digested. The same is true of beer which is sometimes called liquid bread. The brewing of golden grain belt beer converts the barley into a delicious food-drink that besides containing a high percentage of nourishment is an aid to digestion. Recommended for home use. Why Do Doctors Differ?

As an illustration of the old saying that "doctors will differ" the following is related by a physician of unquestioned veracity: In the course of a lecture which he was delivering before a number of students he had brought in by the mother a child six months old, which, he stated, was suffering from a very peculiar affection, and he requested five of the students present each separately to diagnose the case.

The first gave it as his medical belief that the child was suffering from incipient pneumonia; the second, after examination, pronounced it incipient diphtheria; the third staked his reputation upon its being peritonitis; the fourth called it marasmus, while the fifth said it was malaria. When they had each made a careful examination the lecturer said:

"Well, gentlemen, have you anything further to say in regard to the case?"

"Nothing more than has been already said," was the reply from each.

"Well," said he, taking the little one and holding it before them, "this is a child that has never had a day's illness since its birth. It is the most perfectly healthy child that I have ever seen."—London Answers.

Fleecing the Farmers.

Edward L. Slater, state dairy and food commissione, has just issued a bulletin in which he tells some interesting things of the results of examinations of sample packages taken from box car merchants of Chicago who insist on operating in the rural districts of Minnesota whenever they get a chance.

Out of eighty-two samples of different products taken from one shipment, only two complied with the pure food laws. Every one of the eighty packages were short in weight thus clearly demonstrating that the fraud was not accidentally accomplished. The average net weight of the so-called three-pound packgaes of spices were a trifle over two and three-quarter pounds, representing an illegitimate saving to the company of nearly one-fourth of a pound on each package. The price asked for the goods was not an inducement for the purchaser to be content with short-weight packages.

The bulletin further tells of the chemical analysis of these box car goods. Ground roasted beans were found to be mixed with coffee, and blackberry cordial was well supplied with salicylic acid and coal tar dye. White pepper proved to be in part ground cocoanut shells and starch.

SCHREITER'S PHARMACY

SLATER WOULD HELP.

Believes that Inspectors Should Be Sent to Aid Farmers.

E. K. Slater, state dairy and food commissioner, has in mind the sending of a number of dairy inspectors throughout Northern Minnesota where dairying is just getting a footing, and which he has already gone on record as saying is the most promising section of the state for dairying in years to come because of its luxuriance in clover and hay. These inspectors are not to go as critics, but as helpers.

"I believe our next step should be to go right to the farms of our cow-keepers and help them to see the folly of keeping cattle at a loss. The Northern Minnesota cow is producing very little more than 150 pounds of butter annually. She produced practically as much ten years ago. She should be on the increase when properly handled. My plan is for a dairy inspector to go to each creamery and cheese factory and remain long enough at each to talk with each patron about his herd and advise him where he can improve his methods. I would have the inspectors give their whole attention to improving two things—quality and quantity. I can see no better way for the practical encouragement of dairying in this new field.

"I would also suggest to farmers who are interested to arrange for two or three rousing meetings of neighbors who are interested in bettering their herds and getting more money out of their cows. If I am notified in time, I will be glad to send an inspector to such meetings where he can give practical instruction that should mean, if followed, gold dollars for all farmers who hear and follow his advice."

Paper Carpets.

They are making carpets of paper in Bohemia. One may say truthfully of these carpets that they cannot be beaten. Neither can golden grain belt beer be beaten as a home beverage. This delicious beverage is brewed from the best of nature's products in a better way than other beers and should be served daily with your meals to insure perfect health. ATTACK OF PARALYSIS.

County Treasurer Tandberg Very Ill At His Home Here.

County Treasurer O. T. Tandburg was suddenly stricken with paralysis at his home last Saturday evening, and since that time has been very seriously ill. The right side of his body is affected and the patient has suffered a great deal. The best of medical attendance is being given him and he is getting along as well as might be expected, although it is probable that he will be confined to his bed several weeks at least. Mr. Tandberg has been working very hard for the past couple of months and the strain was more than he could stand. Took a Long Fall.

John Hennemuth, the twelve-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hennemuth, had a narrow escape from serious injury Saturday noon. He had been out towards the mill picking berries and was returning home across the high Great Northern bridge just north of town. Whether he stumbled and fell or was attempting to crawl down on the frame work of the bridge is not just clear but at any rate he lost his balance and fell headlong to the ground, thirty feet below, striking on the side of his head and face. Some boys in the neighborhood heard his cries and assisted him up when help was summoned and he was taken home. Dr. Watson was summoned but on examination found that no bones were broken, although the young fellow's head and face were badly cut and bruised. It was feared at first that some internal injury might result but nothing turned up and the young man is on the high road to recovery. It was a long fall and might easily have resulted fatally.

WHY NOT GET BUSY

Red Lake Falls Should Have a Couple of Market Days Again This Fall.

THE GAZETTE has been asked by several farmers in this neighborhood during the past week, whether or not the Red Lake Falls people intended holding any market or bargain days again this fall.

The two that were held last year struck a popular chord with the people of this part of the county and they are anxious to see the idea continued.

It seems, too, that the business people would not need any great urging to get busy and arrange for a day of bargains, sports and general good time, as it means a great deal to the town in the advertising it will get. Some good sports could be arranged for, prizes could be given for different articles brought in by the farmers, a band concert by the celebrated Red Lake Falls band could be given in the afternoon, and with just a little exertion on the part of the business people there would be no question as to the success of the venture.

These market days are a good thing in more ways than one, and should be made a regular fall feature with all Minnesota towns. It brings in the farmers for a day of pleasure and they get together and become better acquainted, thereby exchanging ideas that are bound to be of benefit to all.

Then again, it gives them an idea that the business people are pleased to furnish entertainment once in a while in appreciation of the trade accorded them year in and year out.

By all means, let's arrange for a market day or two this fall. It will bring returns in more ways than one.

Prof. C. O. Smith Dead.

Word was received here last Saturday of the death of Prof. Clint O. Smith, of Linton, North Dakota, at one time director of the Red Lake Falls concert band, and who was well known to the people here. Death was due to heart failure, with which Prof. Smith had suffered for several years. Mr. Smith was a fine man and a good leader, and during the time he had charge of the local band made friends with all whom he came in contact. He was of a kind generous nature and was a favorite with the band boys and people who knew him best. Prof. Smith was only 57 years old, but his career as a bandmaster and musician was a long one, having during his lifetime directed the 3rd P. Regimental band, Araphoe, Neb. 2nd K. P. Regimental Guard Band, Kansas; Saybrook, Ill., Light Guards band; Red Lake Falls, Minn., concert band; Mandan Military band; Reynolds concert band; Hillsboro Metropolitan band; Linton concert band; he was also director of the State Band Union of Nebraska from 1893 to 1896.

Deceased leaves one son, Dr. Claude O. Smith who is also well known to the band boys, and as these men were bosom companions as well as father and son, the loss falls heavily on the Doctor, and the sympathy of all who know them is extended to him in his bereavement.

HAYWOOD WALKS FORTH A FREE MAN

IS ACQUITTED OF THE MURDER OF FORMER GOVERNOR STEUNENBERG.

WILL PROSECUTE THE OTHERS

STATE ANNOUNCES THAT CASES OF MOYER AND PETTIBONE WILL BE PUSHED.

Boise, Idaho, July 30. — Into the bright sunlight of a beautiful Sabbath morning, in the stillness of a city drowsy with the lazy slumbers of a summer Sunday, William D. Haywood, defendaut in one of the most noted trials involving conspiracy and murder that the country has ever knowu, walked yesterday a free man, acquitted of the murder of Former Governor Frank Steunenberg.

The probability of a verdict of acquittal la the case of the secretary-treasurer and ackuowledged leader of the Western Federation of Miners had beeu since Saturday, when Judge Fremont Wood read his charge, which was regarded as strongly favoring the defense in its interpretation of the law of conspiracy, circumstantial evidence and the corroboration of an accomplice who confesses.

It was also freely predicted that in the eveat of Haywood's acquittal the state would abandon the prosecution of his associates, Charles H. Moyer, the president of the federation, and George A. Pettibone of Denver. Statements from counsel and from Gov. Gooding issued yesterday dispel this viaw of the situation.

Jury at Last Agrees.

It was after heing out for twenty-one hours that the jury, which first had heen divided at ten to two, finally came tn an agreement. Events moved rapidly eaough nfter this, and when at last the principal actors in tha trial had heen gathered into tha court room at a few moments before 8 o'clock the white envelope handed by the foreman to the judge was torn open and the verdict read.

Haywood's attorneys were fairly lifted from their seats, and Judge Wood made no effort to restrain them as they surrounded Haywood to shout nloud their congratulations.

First Thought of Mother.

Haywood's first thought after his release wns of his aged mother, who Saturday had suffered a complete nervous breakdown after the jury had retired. Haywood walked to St. Luke's hospital and unannounced rushed into his mother's room. So great was the effect of the news upon the elderly lady that last night she wa sup and about and happy.

Next Haywood went to the little cottage where his wife and daughters have been stopping. Once home, Haywood said: "I want to thank the people of Boise for their kindness to my wife, my mother, my family and my friends."

Will Prosecute Others.

Senator Borah said:

"I have no comment to make other than that twelve good men and true men of the State of Idaho have passed upon the case, and that disposes of it so far as the State of Idaho and Haywood are concerned. The prosecution of the other men indictetd will be pushed vigorously and without any reference to the Haywood trial."

E. F. Richardson, one of Haywood's leading counsel, said:

"We have had a fair trial. We have had an impartial trial and conscientious jury and an impartial judge."

Hot Springs, N. C., July 30—Senator Edmund W. Pettus of Alabama died here last night at 10 o'clock. He was eighty-six years old July 6.

Senator Morgan, three years Pettus' junior, but his senior in service in the senate, died two months ago.

CONEY ISLAND IS DEVASTATED

PLAYGROUND OF NEW YORK'S MILLIONS VISITED BY DISASTROUS FIRE.

New York, July 30. — Coney Island the playground of New York's millions, was visited by a disastrous fira early yesterday, and seven hlocks in the amusement zone were completely destroyed. Tilyou Steeplechasa Park and nearly a score of small hotels were wiped out, and for a time the flames threatened destruction to Luna Park aud Dreamland, great homes of summer amusement, and to the scores of smaller places which fringe the water edge for a mile. A lucky shift of the wind to seaward aided the firemen and probably saved the whola picturesque area, hut not until $1,000,000 damage had been done.

Three Persons Injured.

Three persons were injured, one of them, Gottfried Messerli, a fireman, probably fatally. Only the advance guard of the 300,000 people who flocked to Coney Island yesterday saw the fire, but the thrilling tales of the fearless rescue of San Dora, the armless and legless man, and of tha flight of Francesco, the fire eater, wheu the alarm was sounded, were told and retold along noisy Surf avenue and ia the less particular Bowery.

The inflammable character of the many attractions made flue food for the flames, and notwithstanding the many streams of water poured on them the conflagration seemed to defy all efforts to stop its course.

Panic Among Freaks.

The destruction of Steeplechase Park was a spectacular sight. Tho alarm of fire woke up dozing Coney Island with a start, and in a few minutes Surf avenue was jammed with excited freaks and frolickers, chorus girls, snake charmers, animal trainers and performers.

The fire put many small danca halls and bathing pavilions out of business, and many sandwich men and frankfurter men who had stored their stands and carts in nooks and crannies hetween buildings lost everything.

STATE WINS IN FARE WAR.

Railroads Capitulate to North Carolina After a Hard Struggle.

Raleigh, N. C., July 30.—The State of North Carolina has won its fight to hava its passenger rate law of 2 1-4 cents observed hy all the railroads, pending an appeal to the courts hy tha roads which proposa to fight tha law, following the arrest Saturday at Asheville of President Finley of the Southern railroad.

The promisa of obedience to tha law was given at a conference the railroads sought with Gov. Glenn, who had stated that as a precedent to any agreement the 2 1-4 cent rate must be put into effect.

Aftar the conference Gov. Glenn stated that at the heginning of tha conference the railroad representatives declared they were ready to agrea to the 2 1-4 cent rate, which later is to be tested in tha original injunction case befora Judge Pritchard, an appeal if necessary to he taken hy the state to the suprema court of the United States, while the railroads would appeal the case in Wake county to the North Carolina supreme court, and if necessary take tha case on writ of error to the supreme court of the United States.

The only trouble in the conference was a selection of the data at which the 2 1-4 cent rate should become effective. The railroads wanted a longer time than the atate was willing to grant, hut finally the 8th of August was agreed upon, as the railroad representatives said it would he impossible sooner to make the proper arrangements.

14 DEAD IN TENEMENT WRECK.

Explosion, Followed by Fire, Fatal to Women and Children.

Auburn, N. Y., July 30.—The steamboat Frontenac was burued and beached opposite Farley's Point, at Lake Cayuga, Saturday and eight lives were lost. The victims were all women and children passengers and all were drowned.

Several other passengers were severely hurned before the boat could bs beached. The Frontenac, an old side-wheeler, douhle-deck craft, which has plied between Ithaca and Cayuga on Lake Cayuga for twenty-five years, left the former place for the upper lake points, carrying fifty passengers and a crew of twelve men.

In midlake fire broke out in the engine room, and fanned hy a stiff north-east wind spread quickly to the after section of the hoat. The crew of twelve men behaved well, fighting the flames at first, but seeing that nothing could save the hoat they turned their attention to the passengers.

Life preservers were put on every ona that could he found in the brief time, but in spite of these efforts eight women and children perished. Capt. Brown directed the work of the crew and was the last to leave the hurning boat.

The shock of the accident and the struggle was too much for Cartenson, who had been in ill health, and he died soon after getting ashore.

LEADER ADVISES THE USE OF GUNS

GIVES GOVERNOR TWENTY-FOUR HOURS IN WHICH TO "GRANT MEN JUSTICE."

FEAR TROUBLE ON THE RANGE

GOVERNOR'S REPRESENTATIVES INVESTIGATE—MINES BEING OPENED.

Duluth, Aug. 3. — One working day hss passed since operations on the range, following the settlement of tha ore dock strike, were hegun hy the United States Steel corporation and the independent mines, and no serious disorder was reported. The industrial sky over the range is not cloudless, however, for the sullen attitude of the followers of the Western Federation of Miners indicate an attitude of desperation, which was somewhat intensified by a vitriolic address delivered hy Petriella, the strike leader, in which, while counseling peace, he advocated the use of guns to maintain what ha said was their right to sell their labor where they could to the hest advantage.

Advises Violence.

In this address Petriella gave the governor twenty-four hours in which to "grant tha men justice," at the end of which time he advised the men to he "ready to strike the head off any man who tries to crush you; if not as American citizens, do it as human heings." Whether at the end of twenty-four hours anything will come of this is awaited with anxiety and the officials are prepared. All of the special guards who have been in Duluth during the past few days were rushed to the range. It was said that 250 men were in the party and they will augment Sheriff Bates' force of deputies in case there is any trouble.

Resuming Operations

The Steel corporation officials ara carrying out the wishes of Gov. Johnson in the manner in which they are resuming operations. They ara opening the mines one at a time and gradually resuming work with as many men as they can get to go to work. All the old men will be given an opportunity to return to work without discrimination and with the guaranty of being protected by the forces at the sheriff's command.

The strikers will not he interfered with if they go about in small groups, but if they attempt to march in larga bodies they will be stopped.

Give No Pretext for Clash.

This was made clear to them when they attempted to march from Hibbing to the meeting at Chisholm, where Petriella made his violent speech. Otherwise the officials will handle them gently in order that there may be no pretext for a clash.

Reports received here yesterday indicate that mining operations were resumed heavily in both Hibbing and Eveleth districts. Thomas D. O'Brien, former state insurance commissioner, and Harvey Grimmer, executive clerk to Gov. Johnson, who visited the range towns yesterday as personal representatives of the governor, returned to Duluth last evening.

Will Report to Governor.

They reported everything quiet on the range. Mr. O'Brien said he had succeeded in getting each side to agree to respect the other's rights under the law. He thought the governor would issue a proclamation defining these positions and any infraction on either side would then be dealth with accordingly.

Mr. O'Brien and Mr. Grimmer left last night for St. Paul, and their report will be submitted to-day.

Many who hanked on a big harvest find themselves not only minus crops, but with useless ground, injured cattle and damaged buildings and homes. ANOTHER SUICIDE ADDS HORROR AND MYSTERY TO GRUESOME CASE.

SCANDAL MAY BE UNEARTHED

INTIMATE FRIEND FOLLOWS THE YOUNG LADY'S EXAMPLE AND TAKES HIS LIFE.

Colorado, Springs, Colo., July 31.—Amos N. Rumbaugh of Washington, D. C., a close friend of Miss Laura Matthews, the young woman who committed suicide near Broadmoor Sunday night, added horror and mystery to the gruesome case by shooting himself through the head yesterday in the same manner adopted by Miss Matthews, dying later in the hospital to which he was taken for treatment.

Rumbaugh committed the act in his room at the Alta Vista hotel. The time when the fatal shot was fired is not known.

Fails to Attend Inquest.

The deed was discovered only when officers went to his room to ascertain why he had not responded to the subpoena to attend the coroner's inquest over Miss Matthews' body yesterday.

That the act of Rumbaugh was the direct result of the death of Miss Matthews is not doubted. He was to have appeared yesterday afternoon as a witness at the coroner's inquest to tell what he knew of his friend's tragic end. Rumbaugh claimed to be but a chance acquaintance of the girl, but it developed that he knew here in Chicago, and also knew C. A. Coey, the wealthy Chicagoan, and Dr. M. A. Thomas of the "101 ranch." He was frequently a member of parties at which Miss Matthews and the other men referred to were members.

May Entagle Prominent Men.

It was he who sent the telegram to Coey, demanding that he "do the right thing by the girl," and it was with him that Miss Matthews left the letter in which was inclosed another letter to Coey.

The officers have not yet had time to examine Rumbaugh's papers and affairs, and the coroner has had his room locked. If Rumbaugh did not destroy the letter left him by Miss Matthews, together with the letter to Coey, it is believed they will show startling facts that may entangle many people of prominence.

WILD PANIC ON CANAL BOATS.

Arches Supporting Canal Give Way—Boats Drawn Into Creek Beneath.

Syracuse, N. Y., Aug. 1.—The stone arches that support the bed of the Erie canal at a point near the center of this city where it passes over Onondaga creek gave way yesterday afternoon and four canal boats were drawn into the bed of the creek beneath. Fifty feet of the wall of the three-story Empire flouring mill fell into the water and the Bartels and Greenway breweries, respectively on the north and south banks of the canal, were threatened with demolition.

The driver of the canal boat, Peter J. Rolter of Black River noticed that the boat was moving too rapidly, and hurriedly moored it to the canal bank. The rope snapped like a thread, carrying away a part of the wall upon which the flouring mill stands. Fred Race, owner of the boat, brought his wife and daughter on deck, and when the boat neared a safe section of the wall all jumped ashore.

The Goodalle was tied up at the gas plant to a crane. It pulled the crane over and severed a steel anchorage cable. A foreman in the gas plant caught two women and a child as they jumped to the bank, and the boat was drawn into the break. Two boats owned by Frank G. Foot of New York were swept into the vortex. Mr. Foot's wife and four children were saved by a deck hand.

All canal traffic is tied up and it will be several days before the damage can be repaired.

GOVERNMENT FILES SUIT ASKING FOR AN INJUNCTION OR RECEIVER.

Washington, Aug. 1.—The government yesterday filed in the United States circuit court for the district of of Delaware at Wilmington a petition against E. I. Dupont de Nemours & Co., the E. I. Dupont de Nemour Powder Company of New Jersey and twenty-four other corporations and seventeen individuals connected with the corporations, which are made defendants in the petition.

The petition relates that all the defendants are engaged in interstate trade and commerce in gunpowder and other high explosives and are violating the act of July 2, 1890, commonly known as the Sherman anti-trust act. It seeks to prevent and restrain the unlawful existing agreements, contracts, combinations and conspiracies in restraint of such trade and commerce, to prevent and restrain the defendants to monopolize such trade and commerce and to dissolve the existing monopoly therein.

The court is asked to determine whether public interests will be better subserved by the appointment of receivers to take possession of the property of the alleged trust, with a view to bring about conditions in trade and commerce that will be in harmony with the law.

Bodies of Two Unidentified Women Found in New York.

One woman was found dead early yesterday in an areaway on East Ninetieth street. The marks of a thumb and forefinger were visible on her throat. She was about twenty-seven years old. No one in the neighborhood heard sounds of a struggle.

The body of the other woman, also the victim of a strangler, was found last night in a Twenty-second street boarding house. A necktie had been knotted tightly around her throat and she had been dead for several hours.

The police believe that both crimes were committed by the same person, as both bodies were mutilated in the same manner.

Hoke Smith for his signature, which has been practically pledged, and prohibition will become a law in Georgia.

Tipler then descended and both were drowned.

State News of Interest

50,000 TONS OF BUTTER.

Minnesota's Creamery Output Grows Rapidly.

From a total production of 7,500,000 pounds of butter in 1887 to an annual increase of about that number of pounds in the past three years is the record of the growth of the creamery industry in the State of Minnesota. While the figures for the year ending July 31, 1907, have not been compiled, the total undoubtedly will reach 100,000,000,000 pounds, and possibly exceed that number.

The annual report of State Dairy and Food Commissioner Edward K. Slater, which has just come from the printer's hands, gives the details of the production of butter by the creameries of the state for 1904. In that year the total production was 78,455,459 pounds. In the next two years the increase was about 7,000,000 pounds a year, and the increase will probably exceed that amount somewhat, so that the total production for the year will be about 100,000,000 pounds. This relates only to the products of the creameries and does not include the dairy butter, the production of which has also increased in late years, although the rapid increase in the number of creameries has put their production greatly ahead of that of the dairies.

In referring to the creamery statistics the report states:

"During the past two years eighty new creameries have been added to the number previously in operation, and this is not only addition of a quarter million dollars to the taxable property of the state, but is carrying the important industry more extensively into that portion of our state where diversified farming is so essential to its upbuilding.

"The figures show an increase of 7,000,000 pounds of butter over that produced in 1903, a gain of $1,540,000, and this money very largely goes into the pockets of the farmers."

The report shows that in 1904 there were 825 creameries in the state, which, with the eighty added during the next two years, makes a total of 905 creameries in operation in the state on July 31, 1906.

R. F. D. LIFE STRENUOUS.

Country Mail Carrier Covers 52,246 Miles in Seven Years' Service.

Al Burgess, carrier on Rural Free Delivery Route No. 1, out of Amboy, who now is enjoying the fifteen days' vacation allowed by the postoffice department, has had a strenuous time during the more than seven years he has been on this route.

Burgess is now serving his eighth year, and during his employment has drawn $4,100 from the government. His first year's pay was $450, and it has been gradually increased until now it has reached $900. His route is twenty-six and one-half miles long, and he has covered 62,246 miles.

He has had thirteen runaways, made one trip on his wheel; that is, he started on the wheel, but came in on foot; one trip on horseback, threatened to "lick" a patron, did errands the first year for the schoolma'am free, has been and still is a general favorite with those he serves. He has used up three new buggies, three second-hand ones and three carts. He does not use up his horses completely, for on the first symptoms of breakdown he trades them off.

SEEK AGENCY TIMBER.

Lumber Companies Back Proposed Red Lake Reservation.

There is a rumor to the effect that a bill will be introduced at the next session of congress authorizing the sale of a large amount of standing pine timber on the Red Lake Indian reservation, between the arms of upper and lower Red lakes. That there are several lumber concerns that operate in the northern part of the state anxious to have the pine placed on the market has been made evident of late by the visit to Red Lake of several prominent lumbermen, and also the representatives of a number of other companies. It is estimated that there is on the entire Red Lake Indian reservation about 500,000,000 feet of standing pine timber. Of this amount there are 125,000,000 feet embraced in the territory covered by the proposed congressional legislation. The latter timber lies east of the narrows between the two arms of Red lake, and stands thickly on the ridges, the low spots being covered with tamarack, spruce and other merchantable timber. This timber easily could be logged and placed in Red lake.

FOR STATE BUILDING.

Minnesota Club of Seattle Urges Cities to Act.

The Minnesota club of Seattle, composed of former residents of this state, is agitating the matter of a Minnesota building at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific exposition in that city in 1909. An attempt was made to secure an appropriation from the legislature. This having failed, Christopher W. Hoar, formerly of St. Paul, is trying to secure the help of the cities of the state to erect the building.

PURE-BRED CATTLE AT FAIR.

Auction Sales, as Usual, Will Be Feature This Year.

The auction sales of pure-bred cattle are always very attractive features of the Minnesota state fair. City and country people alike throng the great amphitheater when the beautiful cattle are brought into the arena to be knocked down (not literally) under the auctioneer's hammer. Whether a judge of animals or not, everyone likes to see them. This year's sale of Hereford cattle will be in charge of Thomas Smith, better known to the breeders as "Tom" Smith of Crete, Ill. In a letter to the fair management received recently Mr. Smith says that there will be about forty-five head of registered Hereford cattle consigned to the Minnesota state fair.

"We will have," says Mr. Smith, 'sons and daughters and grandsons and granddaughters of such sires as Peerless Wilton XXXIX., who has sired more international champions than any other bull living, and also progeny of the $9,000 champion Perfection and his full brother, Perfection III., said by good judges to be equal to the champion. There are also consigned a goodly string of young animals sired by Anxiety Wilton Yet, of Anxiety Wilton and Grove III. breeding. This Anxiety Wilton cross made the name of Thomas Clark famous among breeders. And a young bull sired by Anxiety Wilton Yet topped the Minnesota state fair last year.

"There will also be grandsons of Pride of Evergreen, who sired the international champion, Woods Principal. G. W. Way & Son of New Sharon, Iowa, will send three yearling show bulls of Beau Brummel breeding, and J. C. Robinson & Son of Evansville, Wis., will have cattle on exhibition and will enter in the sale four animals. These breeders have Pride of Evergreen and Kansas Lad blood of Evergreen and Kansas Lad make a good showing as well as topping the average in any sale they enter.

"It goes without saying that when the following breeders consign to a sale there will be something on hand worth seeing and bidding for: H. G. Fluck, Goodman, Ill.; C. N. Cosgrove, Le Sueur, Minn.; G. W. Way & Son, New Sharon, Iowa; J. C. Robinson, Evansville, Wis.; F. Stoll, Viroqua, Wis.; M. Schoonmaker, Crete, Ill.; McEldowney & Wallace, Chicago Heights, Ill.; A. Butterman, Dyer, Ind.; F. Mussman, Giant Park, Ill.; George Mason, King City, Mo.; William Long, Goodman, Ill."

The Hereford sale is to take place on the afternoon of Wednesday, Sept. 4, of fair week.

SHORT WEIGHT.

Food Department Does Business With Box Car Merchant.

In a bulletin just issued by Edward K. Slater, state dairy and food commissioner, attention is called to the seizure of a carload of goods shipped into the state by a box car merchant and what happened when the department had concluded its investigation of the various packages of foodstuffs in the car. The bulletin shows that over 98 per cent of the packages were short in weight.

The report on this matter says:

"The real value of the law passed by the legislature in 1905, giving this department authority to seize shipments of food products into the state, has never been better exemplified than recently. An inspector of this department tied up a shipment of goods from Chicago and submitted samples to the laboratory. Out of eighty-two samples of different products taken from one shipment only, two complied with the pure food laws. Every one of the eighty packages were short weight, thus clearly demonstrating that the fraud was not accidentally accomplished.

"Complaint was entered against the agent of the company and, upon pleading guilty, he was fined $50 and costs, amounting to $86.24. Attention is called to the findings of the chemists upon the examinations of a number of articles seized:

"Coffee, marked fifteen pounds. Net weight, thirteen pounds, eight ounces.

"Cinnamon, marked fifteen pounds. Net weight 12 pounds 12 ounces.

"Cloves, marked three pounds. Net weight two pounds 12 ounces.

"White pepper, marked five pounds. Net weight 4 pounds 11 ounces.

"Rice, marked five pounds. Weight of bag and contents, four pounds thirteen ounces.

"The average net weight of the so-called three-pound packages of spices is about two pounds twelve and one-half ounces, representing an illegitimate saving to the company of nearly one-fourth pound on each package.

"The price asked for the goods was not an inducement for the purchaser to be content with short weight."

BOLTS HIT SAME BARNS.

Buildings Two Miles Apart Struck and Burned Second Time.

Faribault, Minn., Special.—Two years ago two large barns east of here, situated near Kenyon and about two miles apart and owned by M. H. Davis and E. G. Miller, were struck by lightning and burned to the ground. Both of the barns were rebuilt on the same foundations. During the heavy storm the other evening both barns were completely destroyed, no other buildings in this section being injured.

There is a remarkable tree on the Fidge estate, in Soknedal. It is a combination of three species, the birch, the mountain ash and the oak, made by nature herself. At a distance the tree resembles an oak, but if one glances at the top he sees the birch crown. The trunk is that of an oak, but many years ago it was cut off about ten feet from the ground, and from the stump has grown a birch, now about thirty feet in height. By the side of the birch, springing from the same stem, stands a mountain ash, about half as high. A wreath of strong oak branches grows out of the trunk.

Two expert fishermen of Norway have been engaged by the steam fishing company, Salmo, of St. Petersburg, to take charge of a fishing expedition that is to be sent into the Siberian waters to fish for salmon. A score of Finlanders will serve as assistants, together with a strong force of Russians. Norse methods are to be used, as well as Norse seins.

A very interesting find of ancient relics was recently made in Haa. It consists of three spears and a dagger, made of flint, apparently during the stone age, all showing remarkable skill in workmanship. The relics were found at a depth of about four feet, in a moor. They are of an extremely rare type, there being only one other relic of the kind at the Stavanger museum, to which these valuable remains were presented.

The national agricultural exposition—one of the first of its kind—recently held at Frogner, near Christiania, was a complete success, and augurs well for the country's future advancement in agriculture. The well known correspondent, Michael Alger, wrote the following account while the exposition was in progress:

"This exposition, like most expositions, was not a finished product on the day of the opening. However, it is well worthy of a visit. The animals, the farm products and the agricultural machinery and implements exhibited, are all that could be expected in a country with a surface like that of Norway. Several old buildings are exhibited, showing the different stages of development which the abodes of the Norwegian farmers have passed through during the last three centuries. Dairying is shown by 'life exhibits.' The most primitive way of buttermaking can be seen going on alongside of production of the article according to the latest scientific methods. There is also a 'saeter,' with cows, goats, 'budeier' (female caretakers), and everything else to make it an exact copy of the real Norwegian mountain summer pastures.

"That farming in Norway during the last fifty years has made rapid strides toward cultivation of the soil on scientific principles is obvious, and the results must, judging from the impression that this exposition gives, be very gratifying, both to the farmers themselves and to the country in general. Farm machinery has also come into use to an extent that hardly could be expected when the broken condition of the country is taken into consideration."

A dispatch from Stockholm says that several inches of snow recently fell in Karungi. This is the first snowfall that has occurred in that part of Sweden at such a time of the year.

The well-known Swedish opera singer, Miss Anna Tropp, who last year withdrew from stage life, to wed Ernst Gustaf Wigart, a prominent government official, has begun suit in the courts for damages on account of breach of promise. She alleges that Wigart has declined to marry her, after having permitted it to be publicly announced that they were engaged, on which account she holds that she is his lawful wife and therefore entitled to a part of his property. Owing to the prominence of both parties, the case is attracting widespread attention.

This summer it is the city of Lund's turn to welcome the people of Sweden and the world to the annual exposition. It is eleven years since Malmo, a Southern city of the kingdom, had the exposition, and it is time to hold the exposition in a south coast city again. Owing to the proximity of Lund to Copenhagen, it is expected that thousands of Danes will visit the exposition, and, of course, the attendance from Southern Sweden will be of a record-breaking character. The exposition buildings, arches and colonnades are all ready, presenting to the visitor a most attractive appearance.

The population of Gotland seems to be unique in that almost one-half of it is feminine, the number of males being 24,670 and the number of females 27,285. As is well known, there is a great preponderance of women in all European countries, despite the fact that more male children are born than female babes, so the large percentage of males in the population of Gotland is rather remarkable. Another unique thing about the population of this district is the remarkable longevity of the people. Out of every 1,000 people 233 attain or pass the age of fifty years, while in the rest of Sweden only 164 out of every 1,000 reach that age.

A Russian torpedo boat recently entered the harbor of Gafle, arousing great curiosity. The commander stated that the boat was merely making a trial trip, but why it should come direct from St. Petersburg to this city he would not say. It was learned that on the way the torpedo boat had followed closely after E. Kronberg's fine new steam yacht, which it seemed to study with extreme care. On account of the old-time suspicion and fear in Sweden of the purposes of the Russian government, the unexpected visit of the warship was not a very pleasing one to the Swedish imagination.

The socialists are making a move to establish a bank in Copenhagen. Hitherto they had divided their business among the various banks of the city, but of late there has risen a strong demand for a socialist bank, to be managed by socialists, on socialistic principles, so far as possible, under existing laws. This is but one of the many indications of the increasing strength and activity of the socialists of Copenhagen.

In a recent issue we spoke of an excursion to Iceland, undertaken by some forty members of the Danish rigsdag, the purpose being to get an insight from first hand knowledge of the needs of the island in the way of legislation. Now it is announced that the king is also going to visit Iceland, and great interest attaches to the event, as it is known that his majesty's hope is to cement the bonds of friendship between Denmark and its tributary. The Icelanders are getting restless under the Danish rule, however mild and just it may be, and are beginning to talk pretty boldly of declaring their independence. To quiet them the Danish government has made them various concessions of a far-reaching character, one of these being the granting of very large rights to the Icelandic parliament—rights that are practically equivalent to home rule for the island, so far as lawmaking is concerned. But Iceland, which has little in common with Denmark, will be asking for complete independence before long, unless a change comes over the people, and the king hopes to bring about such a change by his visit. He will be democratic and seek to win the love of the people.

Emperor William of Germany, his queen and son, Prince Adalbert, were guests at the Danish court the early part of July, and now it is rumored that the betrothal of the Danish king's youngest daughter, Tyra, and the German prince was arranged. Important, if true.

GENERAL MILES thinks we may lose the Philippines. But the General always did look on the bright side of things.

THE earthquake which was recorded by the seismograph, but not otherwise heard from, is strangely like the Thief River county-seat boom.

AT last there is a legitimate excuse for a rise in the price of gasoline. The Standard oil will need a little extra change to pay the $29,240,000 fine imposed by Judge Landis last Saturday.

THE Buffalo Lake News was raised $50 by the board of equlization, but Editor Landy takes it philosophically. He admits that anyone fool enough to invest in a country newspaper plant ought to be made to pay for his folly.

THE Editor of the Windom Citizen was married a few weeks ago, and already is in open rebellion. Hear him: "The Nebraska Supreme court has decided that 'woman is boss of the house.' There are other states where it didn't need a supreme court to decide that point."

THE Minneapolis Journal speaks very highly of Thomas D. O'Brien, the retiring insurance commissioner, calling him "the Taft of Minnesota." Mr. O'Brien is one of the big brain men of the state, honest as the day is long, and measuring up of every responsibility. The state needs more such men.

GOVERNOR JOHNSON has shown ability and sagacity in the miners' strike. There was almost universal demand for troops on the part of the range people but the Governor exhibited better sense than any of these people who want to settle things with bullets. He was ready to send the troops on a moments notice did occasion require, but fortunately for all concerned the situation did not reach such an alarming phase. One of the most admirable traits of Governor Johnson is his level-headedness and common sense.

REGARDING the newspaper consolidations that have been made in many Minnesota towns recently, the Adrian Democrat says: "John E. King, of the Red Lake Courier, has purchased the Gazette and consolidated the two papers. In small country towns having two or more papers the tendency is to do away with competition. Experience has shown that in the country newspaper field competition is not the life of business by a long shot, and the sooner publishers in small towns realize this, the better it will be for them. Where country editors are too numerous it is better for some of them to drop out of the game."

The Hutchinson Leader voices the sentiment of a whole lot of people in saying that "it is a good thing for Minnesota that Joel P. Heatwole quit congress. While he was a power in the house he is still a great power as editor of the Northfield News, and through him and his paper the common people of this great commonwealth have their case against the corporations stated week by week in a way that commands respect and compels a hearing. It is well that Heatwole was in congress; it is well that he quit and again got busy on the Northfield News. He has a habit of telling the truth and adducing the facts that track with the Heatwolian truth."

Notice to Canadian Subscribers.

A recent ruling of the Canadian postal department requires that every copy of THE GAZETTE sent to subscribers residing in Canada bear a one cent stamp. This increase in the postal rates and the labor involved in affixing the stamps makes an increase in the subscription list to Canada subscribers necessary. After this date renewals and new subscriptions to be sent to Canada post offices will be charged at a rate of $1.50 per year.—Editor.

Eastman's Logic.

There is a strong sentiment growing in Thief River Falls to the effect that the people here should be more patriotic and use more of the home flour. A large per cent of the flour sold in Thief River Falls today is that manufactured by the Red Lake Falls Milling company of which Marcus Johnson is the head. Mr. Johnson has been one of the main contributors to the Red Lake end of the county seat fight, and why Thief River Falls people who are buying his product should in an indirect way contribute to the Red Lake Falls campaign fund is not easy to understand. The flour made here in Thief River Falls is just as good as that made anywhere, and should be used exclusively. Let the housewives show a little more patriotism and help Thief River Falls grow.

If THE GAZETTE would tell its readers that any one else but John Eastman wrote the above article, many would at once declare that one more lunatic was ready to be taken to Fergus Falls. As it is they know that Eastman is guilty, and therefore but little attention is paid to what is said. Eastman's logic is rich. If every town would refuse to use flour other than that manufactured at home, flour mills would be a scarce quantity and a whole lot of people would go hungry for bread. The Red Lake Falls milling company as well as the mill at Thief River Falls depends practically altogether upon the outside trade for sustenance, and naturally will place their wares upon the market wherever they can. The Red Lake Falls milling company has been really a business institution in Thief River Falls and the fact that they have been having a good trade does not necessarily mean that the people who buy this flour are contributing to the Red Lake Falls "county seat" fund—although it does signify that they want and have good bread. The Thief River Falls Lumber company has a yard in Red Lake Falls—but never for an instant has an idea been entertained that by patronizing this yard we were donating to Thief River Falls as a community. The Thief River Falls Lumber company is in the lumber business to sell all they can, and if it were not for the trade they receive outside of Thief River Falls, it would be a short lived concern indeed. Eastman's logic in this instance is like a lot more of his county seat "arguments," and why it is that Thief River people have not long ago secured the services of an experienced fool killer, is indeed a mystery.

Milk Must Be Pure.

The state dairy and food department has started war on dairy farmers who are careless with the supplies of milk and cream they sell to creameries.

"As a result of an investigation of complaint by our inspectors," said D. K. Slater, state dairy and food commissioner, "we have found that in some instances milk and cream that were positively putrid were sent to creameries by farmers who did not take proper care of the product. This is especially bad when it is considered that one can of tainted cream, mixed with the supplies of scores of well kept dairies supplying a creamery will make the whole lot bad. Minnesota has already attained too high a place to have the products of Minnesota creameries endangered in their high character by the actions of a few farmers who are uncleanly in the handling of milk and cream. Our inspectors have already caused several arrests in different parts of the state and we intend to instigate a strenuous campaign against such inexcusable evil."

Joseph Corbiel, of this city, calls the attention of THE GAZETTE to the fact that the swimming mask patented by Hon. Halvor Steenerson is not the first one ever made, as in the year 1875, Mr. Corbiel made and used a swimming mask nearly the exact pattern of the one now patented by Congressman Steenerson. Mr. Corbeil never patented his model, however, and does not claim that Mr. Steenerson's patent is infringing on his rights. Mr. Corbiel patented several inventions in the early 70s and last week showed THE GAZETTE several of his invention of years ago.

Spectator: N. A. Nelson, one of our prosperous farmers living out southeast of town, believes in keeping abreast of the times and is continually adding new improvements about his place. He is making preparations to build a silo this fall, and we understand he has placed an order for a Green Mountain ensilage cutter and gasoline engine to operate both machines. The silo is practically a necessity on the dairy farm, and while the first cost is seemingly large the result will easily offset the cost the first year. Work on Mr. Nelson's silo will be watched with much interest and when completed we expect other rural citizens to go home and do likewise.

GETTING READY FOR WORK

St. Joseph's Parochial School Will Open Sept. 2.

Rev. Father Fayolle tells THE GAZETTE that St. Joseph's parochial school will commence on their year's work, Monday Sept. 2nd. The same corps of teachers that conducted the school last year will be in charge of the work again this fall, and they are expected to arrive here next week to get things ready for the opening of the school.

Father Fayolle recently received the returns from the state examinations passed by the pupils of St. Joseph's last spring, and he was highly gratified at the showing made. The percentage was very high, and the markings showed that excellent work is being done by the scholars of that school. The average markings of the entire school was 87 for last year's work, which is surely very satisfactory.

A large attendance is assured for next year's term and a continuance of the excellent work can be looked for.

Sweet Marie To Go.

Sweet Marie, champion trotting mare of the world, will be at the Minnesota State Fair to endeavor to break her world's record of 2:02, made at Columbus, Ohio, last September. Sweet Marie is one of the greatest horses alive and is undoubtedly the fastest trotting mare and perhaps the fastest trotter the world has seen. Cresceus is the only race horse that has ever been in her class and it is possible that a race will be arranged between the two for fair week. At all events Sweet Marie will go against her record and will give a magnificent exhibition. If Dan Patch again lowers the world's record for a pacer and Sweet Marie should lower the record for a trotting mare the state fair meet will be one of the great events in the horse world. The fair is to be held the week of Sept. 2 to 7 and will be the largest in the history of the state.

Geo. Jello, the young man who started the automobile business at Greenbush which has since increased to such large proportion has had his auto wheels fitted out with solid rubber tires instead of pneumatic tires which wear out so quickly. These tires are made of soft rubber and it is said they give almost as good satisfaction as the pneumatic tire while their life is several times the life of a pneumatic tire. Since Jello made such a big success with his machine, there have been three passenger carrying automobiles put on between Greenbush and Roseau and the business men of Roseau recently purchased a large freight carrying machine which has been shipped already and will be used this fall. There is an excellent natural gravel road between the two towns.

County Surveyor Wood was down from Thief River Falls several days this week.

SISTER ROSE.

A STORY OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

BY WILKIE COLLINS

CHAPTER XV.—(CONTINUED.)

A murmur of "Monster! monster!" began with the prisoners on the platform, and spread instantly to the audience, who echoed and echoed it again; the fiercest woman-republican on the benches joined cause at last with the haughtiest woman-aristocrat on the platform. Even in that sphere of direst discords, in that age of sharpest enmities, the one touch of nature preserved its old eternal virtue, and roused the mother-instinct which makes the whole world kin!

Of the few persons in the court who at once foresaw the effect of Danville's answer on the proceedings of the tribunal Lomaque was one. His sallow face whitened as he looked toward the prisoner's platform.

"They are lost," he murmured to himself, moving out of the group in which he had hitherto stood. "Lost! The lie which has saved that villain's head leaves them without the shadow of a hope. No need to stop for the sentence—Danville's infamous presence of mind has given them up to the guillotine!" Pronouncing these words, he went out hurriedly by the door near the platform, which led to the prisoners' waiting room.

Rose's head sank again on her brother's shoulder. She shuddered, and leaned back faintly on the arm which he extended to support her. One of the female prisoners tried to help Trudaine in speaking consolingly to her; but the consummation of her husband's perfidy seemed to have paralyzed her at heart. She murmured once in her brother's ear, "Louis! I am resigned to die—nothing but death is left for me after the degradation of having loved that man." She said those words and closed her eyes wearily, and spoke no more.

"One other question and you may retire," resumed the president, addressing Danville. "Were you cognizant of your wife's connection with her brother's conspiracy?"

Danville reflected for a moment, remembered that there were witnesses in court who could speak to his language and behavior on the evening of his wife's arrest, and resolved this time to tell the truth.

"I was not aware of it," he answered. "Testimony in my favor can be called which will prove that when my wife's complicity was discovered I was absent from Paris."

Heartlessly self-possessed as he was, the public reception of his last reply had shaken his nerves. He now spoke in low tones, turning his back on the spectators, and again fixing his eyes on the green baize of the table at which he stood.

"Prisoners! have you any objection to make, any evidence to call, invalidating the statement by which Citizen Danville has cleared himself of suspicion?" inquired the president.

"He has cleared himself by the most execrable of all falsehoods," answered Trudaine. "If his mother could be traced and brought here, her testimony would prove it."

"Can you produce any other evidence in support of your allegation?" asked the president.

"I cannot."

"Citizen-superintendent Danville, you are at liberty to retire. Your statement will be laid before the authority to whom you are officially responsible. Either you merit a civic crown for more than Roman virtue, or——" Having got thus far, the president stopped abruptly, as if unwilling to commit himself too soon to an opinion, and merely repeated—"You may retire."

Danville left the court immediately, going out again by the public door. He was followed by murmurs from the women's benches, which soon ceased, however, when the president was observed to close his note book, and turn around toward his colleagues. "The sentence!" was the general whisper now. "Hush, hush—the sentence!"

After a consultation of a few minutes with the persons behind him, the president rose, and spoke the momentous words:

"Louis Trudaine and Rose Danville, the revolutionary tribunal, having heard the charge against you, and having weighed the value of what you have said in answer to it, decides that you are both guilty, and condemns you to the penalty of death."

Having delivered the sentence in those terms, he sat down again, and placed a mark against the two first condemned names on the list of prisoners. Immediately afterward the next case was called on, and the curiosity of the audience was stimulated by a new trial.

CHAPTER XVI.

THE waiting room of the revolutionary tribunal was a grim, bare place, with a dirty stone floor, and benches running round the walls. The windows were high and barred, and at the outer door, leading into the street, two sentinels kept watch. On entering this comfortless retreat from the court, Lomaque found it perfectly empty. Solitude was just then welcome to him. He remained in the waiting room, walking slowly from end to end over the filthy pavement, talking eagerly and incessantly to himself.

After a while, the door communicating with the tribunal opened, and the humpbacked gaoler made his appearance, leading in Trudaine and Rose.

"You will have to wait here," said the little man, "till the rest of them have been tried and sentenced; and then you will all go to prison in a lump. He, citizen!" he continued, observing Lomaque at the other end of the hall and hustling up to him. "Here still, eh? If you were going to stop much longer, I should ask a favor of you."

"I am in no hurry," said Lomaque, with a glance at the two prisoners.

"Good!" cried the hunchback, drawing his hand across his mouth. "I am parched with thirst, and dying to moisten my throat at the wine shop over the way. Just mind that man and woman while I'm gone, will you? It's the merest form—there's a guard outside, the windows are barred, the tribunal is within hail. Do you mind obliging me?"

"On the contrary, I am glad of the opportunity."

"That's a good fellow—and, remember, if I am asked for, you must say I was obliged to quit the court for a few minutes, and left you in charge."

With these words, the humpback jailer ran off to the wine shop.

He had scarcely disappeared before Trudaine crossed the room, and caught Lomaque by the arm.

"Save her," he whispered, "there is an opportunity—save her!" His face was flushed—his eyes wandered—his breath on the chief-agent's cheek while he spoke felt scorchingly hot. "Save her!" he repeated, shaking Lomaque by the arm, and dragging him toward the door. "Remember all you owe to my father—remember our talk on that bench by the river—remember what you said to me yourself on the night of the arrest—don't wait to think—save her, and leave me without a word! If I die alone I can die as a man should—if she goes to the scaffold by my side my heart will fail me—I shall die the death of a coward! I have lived for her life—let me die for it, and I die happy!"

He tried to say more, but the violence of his agitation forbade it. He could only shake the arm he held again and again, and point to the bench on which Rose sat—her head sunk on her bosom, her hands crossed listlessly on her lap.

"There are two armed sentinels outside—the windows are barred—you are without weapons—and even if you had them, there is a guard-house within hail on one side of you and the tribunal on the other. Escape from this room is impossible," answered Lomaque.

"Impossible!" repeated the other, furiously. "You traitor! you coward! can you look at her sitting there helpless—her very life ebbing away already with every minute that passes, and tell me coolly that escape is impossible?"

In the frenzy of his grief and despair, he lifted his disengaged hand threateningly while he spoke. Lomaque caught him by the wrist, and drew him toward a window open at the top.

"You are not in your right senses," said the chief-agent, firmly; "anxiety and apprehension on your sister's account have shaken your mind. Try to compose yourself and listen to me. I have something important to say"—(Trudaine looked at him incredulously.) "Important," continued Lomaque, "as affecting your sister's interest at this terrible crisis."

That last appeal had an instantaneous effect. Trudaine's outstretched hand dropped to his side, and a sudden change passed over his expression.

"Give me a moment," he said, faintly; and turning away, leaned against the wall, and pressed his burning forehead on the chill, damp stone. He did not raise his head again till he had mastered himself, and could say quietly, "Speak—I am fit to hear you, and sufficiently in my senses to ask your forgiveness for what I said just now."

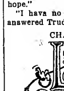
"When I left the tribunal and entered this room," Lomaque began in a whisper, "there was no thought in my mind that could be turned to good account, either for your sister or for you. I was fit for nothing but to deplore the failure of the confession which I came to St. Lazare to suggest to you as your best plan of defense. Since then, an idea has struck me, which may be useful—an idea so desperate, so uncertain—involving a proposal so absolutely dependent as to its successful execution, on the merest chance, that I refuse to confide it to you except on one condition."

"Mention the condition! I submit to it beforehand."

"Give me your word of honor that you will not mention what I am about to say to your sister until I grant you permission to speak. Promise me that when you see her shrinking before the terrors of death to-night, you will have self-restraint enough to abstain from breathing a word of hope to her. I ask this, because there are ten—twenty—fifty chances to one that there is no hope."

"I have no choice but to promise," answered Trudaine.

CHAPTER XVII.



LOMAQUE produced his pocket-book and spoke again.

"I will enter into particulars as soon as I have asked a strange question of you," he said. "You have been a great experimenter in chemistry in your time—is your mind calm enough at such a trying moment as this to answer a question which is connected with chemistry in a very humble way? You seem astonished. Let me put the question at once. Is there any liquid, or powder, or combination of more than one ingredient known, which will remove writing from paper, and leave no stain behind?"

"Certainly! But is that all the question? Is there no greater difficulty?"

"None. Write the prescription, whatever it may be, on that leaf," said the other, giving him the pocket book. "Write it down, with plain directions for use." Trudaine obeyed. "This is the first step," continued Lomaque, putting the book in his pocket, "toward the accomplishment of my purpose—my uncertain purpose, remember! Now listen: I am going to put my own head in danger for the chance of saving yours and your sister's by tampering with the death-list. Don't interrupt me! If I can save one, I can save the other. Not a word about gratitude! Wait till you know the extent of your obligation. I tell you plainly, at the outset, there is a motive of despair, as well as a motive of pity, at the bottom of the action in which I am now about to engage. Silence! I insist on it. Our time is short; it is for me to speak and for you to listen. The president of the tribunal has put the death-mark against your names on the prison list of to-day. That list, when the trials are over, and it is marked to the end, will be called in this room before you are taken to St. Lazare. It will then be sent to Robespierre, who will keep it, having a copy made of it the moment it is delivered, for circulation among his colleagues—St. Just, and the rest. It is my business to make a duplicate of this copy in the first instance. The duplicate will be compared with the original, and possibly with the copy, too, either by Robespierre himself, or by some one in whom he can place implicit trust, and will then be sent to St. Lazare without passing through my hands again. It will be read in public the moment it is received, at the grating of the prison, and will afterward be kept by the gaoler, who will refer to it as he goes around in the evening with a piece of chalk, to mark the cell doors of the prisoners destined for the guillotine to-morrow. That duty happens, to-day, to fall to the hunchback whom you saw speaking to me. He is a confirmed drinker, and I mean to tempt him with such wine as he rarely tastes. If—after the reading of the list in public, and before the marking of the cell doors—I can get him to sit down to the bottle, I will answer for making him drunk, for getting the list out of his pocket, and for wiping your names out of it with the prescription you have just written for me. I shall write all the names, one under another, just irregularly enough in my duplicate to prevent the interval left by the erasure from being easily observed. If I succeed in this, your door will not be marked, and your names will not be called to-morrow morning when the tumbrils come for the guillotine. In the present confusion of prisoners pouring in every day for trial, and prisoners pouring out every day for execution, you will have the best possible chance of security against awkward inquiries, if you play your cards properly for a good fortnight or ten days at least. In that time——"

"Well! well!" cried Trudaine, eagerly.

Lomaque looked toward the tribunal door, and lowered his voice to a fainter whisper before he continued: "In that time Robespierre's own head may fall into the sack! France is beginning to sicken under the Reign of Terror. Frenchmen of the Moderate faction, who have lain hidden for months in cellars and lofts, are beginning to steal out and deliberate by twos and threes together, under cover of the night. Robespierre has not ventured for weeks past to face the Convention committee. He only speaks among his friends at the Jacobins. There are rumors of a terrible discovery made by Carnot, of a desperate resolution taken by Tallien. Men watching behind the scenes see that the last days of Terror are at hand. If Robespierre is beaten in the approaching struggle, you are saved—for the new reign must be a Reign of Mercy. If he conquers, I have only put off the date of your death and your sister's, and have laid my own neck under the axe. Those are your chances—this is all I can do."

The Faithful Little Dog.

A remarkable illustration of a dog's intelligence has occurred in Sutton. A married lady there has a small pet and on her removal to a London hospital, owing to ill health, the animal became greatly distressed, running hither and thither in search of his mistress, to whom he was greatly attached. A week afterward the dog disappeared and two days later returned to its home footsore and weary. It subsequently transpired that the faithful terrier had found his way to the hospital where his mistress lay. No one guided him and he traveled the whole way alone. He waited about for hours trying to gain admission and finally, after many rebuffs, succeeded in running into the hospital and finding the bed where the lady lay. With great delight he hailed her, and after satisfying himself that she was safe, he trotted back to Sutton, about fourteen miles distant.—Exchange.

A Genial Thing in Spiders.

One Useful Indian.

Rain-in-the-Face, who was a leader in the Custer massacre, is now a policeman at the Standing Rock Agency, and is looked upon as a valuable man.

CRADLE OF STRONG SECT.

Here Was Birthplace of Primitive Methodism in England.

The centenary of primitive Methodism was celebrated under remarkable conditions the other day at Mow Cop, a lonely mountain on the borders of Cheshire and Staffordshire, England. It was on Mow Cop in 1807 that a Staffordshire carpenter, Hugh Bourne, a Wesleyan, invited an American preacher, Lorenzo Dow, to hold a meeting. Five men attended it, and Primitive Methodism was born.

RIFLE IN TREE TRUNK.

Oak Has Grown Around the Gun, Almost Completely Imbedding It.

About 11 miles from Centralia, on the road to Little Rock, is a curiosity, to see which would amply repay any one for the drive, says the Seattle Times. About fifty yards from the road, near a deserted homestead, is an old-fashioned rifle imbedded in the trunk of a tree.

The trunk of the scrub oak is not more than six inches through at the point where the rifle is imbedded, so that the stock and barrel are in complete view. The rifle is in a perfect state of preservation.

It is evident that the rifle was placed in a crotch of the tree many years ago, probably at the height at which a man would rest a gun when taking careful aim.

In the course of years the tree has grown completely around the rifle, the lock being imbedded. The crotch is now about six inches above the barrel and the gun is about ten feet from the ground.

Romances innumerable might be woven about the old rifle, but it stands as a memento to the development and progress that have taken place. What was a wild and unexplored country at the time when the rifle was first placed in the crotch of the tree, with the red man monarch of all he surveyed, with scattered settlements of hardy pioneers already preparing to contest his supremacy, is now dotted with farms and homes of prosperous families.

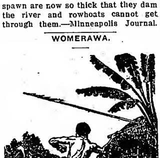
Herring Carry a Boat a Mile.

The latest fish story to come in is that of James Maddock, a fisherman, who was caught in the midst of a large school of herring in Gunpowder river, and claims that his boat was fairly carried along on the backs of the fish.

According to Maddox, despite his efforts at the oars, he was carried nearly a mile out of his course before he succeeded in extricating his boat from the school. In one haul of a big 600-fathom seine so many herring were surrounded that it was impossible to land the seine.

Schools of herring moving into the head waters of Chesapeake bay to spawn are now so thick that they dam the river and rowboats cannot get through them.—Minneapolis Journal.

WOMERAWA.

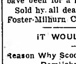


The womerawa is a curious stick which the Australians use for flinging long arrows against enemies or animals.

A Great Bonfire.

The biggest bonfire ever seen in this vicinity was the burning Saturday night of the old Portsmouth, N. H., government drydock, which was towed to the Point of Pines a few weeks ago to be broken up for junk, says the Hartford Courant.

The immense structure, which cost $1,000,000, went up in smoke for the amusement of about 20,000 people. The old dock was fired at 7:30, and so solid was the timbering that after blazing for six hours the frame still stood. It was 360 feet long and 110 feet wide, and contained millions of feet of heavy timber. Great sheets of flame shot up hundreds of feet and the column of smoke made a beacon that was seen far out to sea. Scores of yachts and launches took out pleasure parties and lay in the vicinity to watch the burning.



A WOMAN'S SUFFERINGS.

A Dreadful Operation Seemed to Be the Only Outcome.

Mrs. Clyde Pixley, Bridge St., Belding, Mich., writes: "I had inflammation of the bladder and the trouble had gone so far in five years that my physicians said nothing but an operation would cure me. Awful bearing down pains, backaches and headaches tortured me, there were spells of dizziness and faintness, the kidney secretions were like blood and passed with intense pain. I had lost 30 pounds when I began using Doan's Kidney Pills, and was dreadfully nervous. In one week I felt better and to-day I am a well woman and have been for a long time."

IT WOULDN'T KEEP.

Reason Why Scotchman Did Not Have Demijohn of Whisky.

Miss Elizabeth Marbury of the board of governors of New York's woman's club, the Colony, was discussing the question of the club's liquor license.

"It is rather a matter of indifference to us," she said, "whether we get a license or not. Women, you know are not given to drinking. They are too careful of their appearance. They desire to remain slim and fresh, and wine tends to make us coarse and stale and fat.

"So if we had a license I think we should sell little. It would not be with us as with a farmer I once met in Scotland.

"Traveling in the Scottish highlands one summer I stopped at a farm house for a cup of milk, and the view from the door was so lovely that I said to the farmer:

"'Ah, what a superb place to live in.'

"'Ou, aye,' he answered, in conventional Scots, 'it's richt; but hoo wad ya like, ma'am, to hae to walk fufteen mile ilka time ye wanted a bit glass of whuskey?'

"'Oh, well,' said I, 'why don't you get a demijohn of whisky and keep it in the house?'

"He shook his head sadly.

"'Whusky,' he said, 'won't keep.'"

Her First Long Skirt.

She was a girl of seventeen or thereabouts, and while she waited for a street car the men stared when she wasn't looking at them. The car came and the maiden gathered up her long skirts and stepped aboard. But something happened suddenly. The smokers, in the rear vestibule all sprang to her assistance, for she had stepped on her skirt and fallen.

"I knew I'd do something like that," she said to her companion. "But I wore it all day Easter and didn't have a single mishap."

He Could Not Tell.

Dyer—What did your wife say when you told her you wouldn't be home till late?

Have Trouble with Your Food?

Try

Grape-Nuts

Perfectly Cooked,
Ready to Serve,
Delicious and Healthful

"The ordinary breakfast cereal cooked a few minutes in a half-hearted way will in time weaken the stomach of anything short of an ox.

"Any preparation of wheat or oats put into water that is below the boiling point and cooked as mush is usually served, remains a pasty, indigestible mass. The cells are tough and unopened. In addition, the stomach of a person sensitively constituted refuses to do anything with the pasty mass. It is sent into the second stomach, the Duodenum, where in consequence of the long time of the first process of digestion, is fermented and soured. As an eminent medical man pertinently states, the stomachs of half the people going about the streets are about in the condition of an old vinegar barrel.

"Intestinal dyspepsia is the direct consequence of such feeding."

Knowledge of these facts and a wide experience in the preparation and use of cereals brought out the product known as Grape-Nuts, manufactured with special reference to having the nitrogenous and starchy parts of the grains, of which the food is composed, perfectly and scientifically cooked at the factory, ready for immediate use and therefore not subject to the manipulations of any cook, good or bad.

The starch of the grains, changed to grape-sugar, can be seen glistening on the little granules, and gives forth a delicate sweetish taste, very palatable.

Children and adults obtain fine results from the use of Grape-Nuts food. It is so perfectly adapted to the wants of the human body and so easily digested that many cases are on record of nursing babes being fed very successfully on it. "There's a Reason."

Is Pe-ru-na Useful for Catarrh?

Should a list of the ingredients of Peruna be submitted to any medical expert, of whatever school or nationality, he would be obliged to admit without reserve that each one of them was of undoubted value in chronic catarrhal diseases, and had stood the test of many years' experience in the treatment of such diseases. THERE CAN BE NO DISPUTE ABOUT THIS WHATEVER. Peruna is composed of the most efficacious and universally used herbal remedies for catarrh. Every ingredient of Peruna has a reputation of its own in the cure of some phase of catarrh.

Peruna brings to the home the COMBINED KNOWLEDGE OF SEVERAL SCHOOLS OF MEDICINE in the treatment of catarrhal diseases; brings to the home the scientific skill and knowledge of the modern pharmacist; and last but not least, brings to the home the vast and varied experience of Dr. Hartman, in the use of catarrh remedies, and in the treatment of catarrhal diseases.

The fact is, chronic catarrh is a disease which is very prevalent. Many thousand people know they have chronic catarrh. They have visited doctors over and over again, and been told that their case is one of chronic catarrh. It may be of the nose, throat, lungs, stomach or some other internal organ. There is no doubt as to the nature of the disease. The only trouble is the remedy. This doctor has tried to cure them. That doctor has tried to prescribe for them.

BUT THEY ALL FAILED TO BRING ANY RELIEF.

Dr. Hartman's idea is that a catarrh remedy can be made on a large scale, as he is making it; that it can be made honestly, of the purest drugs and of the strictest uniformity. His idea is that this remedy can be supplied directly to the people, and no more be charged for it than is necessary for the handling of it.

No other household remedy so universally advertised carries upon the label the principal active constituents, showing that Peruna invites the full inspection of the critics.

A Pertinent Question.

Senator Rayner of Maryland is in favor of adequate salaries for school teachers, and at a reception he told a story about a teachers' meeting in a district where the salaries were extremely low.

"A rich, portly banker opened the meeting with an address," he said. "The banker concluded his remarks with an enthusiastic gesture and the words 'Long live our school teachers!'

"'What on?' shouted a thin, pale, seedy woman in a black gown, slightly smeared with chalk marks."

STANDARD OIL COMPANY

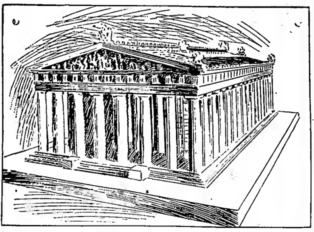
To the Immortals



A model has been prepared in Philadelphia of the proposed memorial to the authors and signers of the Declaration of Independence, which is to be erected in Washington by the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Association of the United States. The association, which is purely nonpartisan, was organized April 13, 1902, in Washington. They expect to erect the building by voluntary contributions from the people, without any aid from the federal government. The building is modeled after the Parthenon of Athens. It is estimated that the cost will be $500,000.

ON THE BIG DOME

STRUCTURE NOT A PLEASANT PLACE IN A STORM.

Workmen Above Roof of Capitol in Washington Have Their Own Troubles When the Lightning Plays About Them.

It is worth while glancing up Capitol Hill way just now at the big dome on the roof of the legislative gas works, for 35 human flies are just winding up the job of spreading waterproof paint over its fancy-work surface, says the Washington Star. It has taken nine tons of paint and nearly two months' steady labor to do the trick, and they're glad—every one of them—that 'tis nearly quitting time. For the job doesn't look easy and isn't as easy as it looks.

Just think of painting—with two and three coats in places—about eight city blocks! That's what this dome-covering proposition about amounts to, for the immense iron structure that looms so large above the big pile of the capitol has somewhere around 800,000 square feet of surface.

This is the first time in five or six years that the dome has been touched up, and David Lynn, foreman of the superintendent's office at the capitol, who runs things around the gas house while Superintendent Elliott Woods is making sure that for about the first time in history a big piece of government work gets done on time, decided that it would be done to the queen's taste. So the human flies were first sent aloft without their paint buckets and told to look for rust and all its metal-destroying relatives. They carried out instructions and every time they noticed even a thin spot in the old paint they scraped clear down to the bright iron, bound the suspicious spot in oil-soaked linen and later slapped on a new elastic paint over that. It doesn't pay to take chances when there are 9,000,000 pounds of iron roof of a building that is crowded to the doors half a dozen months in the year with patriots chosen of the people.

It is for more reasons than one that the human flies are happy that their work on the dome is nearly at an end. One of the reasons—perhaps the greatest one—has to do with thunderstorms. Now, those human flies are sensible men, with more than the average share of courage. Some of them have no nerves at all about ordinary things, and there isn't one who wouldn't enjoy sitting on his covered front porch during a thunderstorm and watching the lightning knock bricks out of his neighbor's chimney. But they are different people when working on the dome, and every time a thunderstorm comes along and catches them up there they scatter for terra firma, shelter and safety like a bunch of Plymouth Rock egg factories from in front of a purring, honking automobile.

When the human flies slipped down their swaying ladders after a recent big storm was over—not feeling much like any more work that day, you can wager—they sat around and chinned about their experience, and finally one of them told the story to Elliott Woods, the wizard of the capitol. And after Mr. Woods had pondered some, and scientific friends of his had pondered some more, one of the human flies climbed up on the shoulders of the Goddess of Freedom to examine the platinum tips of the lightning arresters. And a glance at those tips explained things. They were ripped, and torn, and frayed and frazzled, but not melted or burned even a little bit.

There's a fine scientific way of telling what this means, but it involves the use of considerable brainproof language. Reduced to first principles, however, it means that the dome of the capitol soaks up stray electricity like a poplar tree or a storage battery, and that instead of lightning striking the platinum and traveling down into the dome, it soaks into the dome and travels out of the pits, back up into the sky.

Freaky lightning wasn't the only thing the human flies found up around the dome. In the big gutter just below the top bulge they discovered four men's derbies, a lady's toque, nine ordinary straw lids, one medium Panama, 13 cents in pennies, a nursing bottle, two ham sandwiches in poor repair and a nest containing 38 English sparrow eggs. This latter discovery is considered the most important, as it bears out the theory of some bird fanciers that a community of sparrows, when settled in a thoroughly safe and secure place, place all their eggs in one nest and employ a larger bird of another species at so many worms an hour to do the hatching.

FUN FOR THE MOTHS.

Cedar Chest Just Their Idea of a Domicile.

One day last winter a Washington newspaper man was talking to a friend and the subject turned to the pesky moth and the best means of exterminating the busy little creature. The newspaper man told of innumerable garments that had been riddled by the wee destroyer, and the friend was springing that ancient chestnut on him about capturing the moth and pulling its teeth out, when a practical man of the world, a carpenter by trade, came along and joined in the conversation.

"You can take my word for it," interpolated the carpenter, "that the best way to protect your clothing against moths is to pack them in a chest made of cedar wood. The strong odor of cedar is pizen to the moth and you can't get one of 'em to light within smelling distance of the cedar chest. A friend of mine tried it and his goods proved to be perfectly immune to the destroyers."

Impressed by the words of the man of wood, saws, hatchets and the like, the newspaper man forthwith had a cedar chest constructed and proudly informed his wife he had at last reached a safe and sane solution of the moth problem. Of course he packed his best garments in the chest, and it was but the other day that he had occasion to go into the immune chest to get a garment, when lo! to his horror a flock of moths were seen hustling about in the receptacle.

He removed his clothing piece by piece and found that each of the garments had been perforated early and often by the pestiferous insects, until they looked as though they had been shot at and hit by several loads of bird shot, causing him a loss of many of his best articles of dress.

Now the newspaper man is looking for the carpenter to give him some good advice, and in the meantime the cedar chest has been used as kindling to start a blaze in the furnace.

Five Languages at Command.

Among next October's passengers to Russia from America will be Elizabeth Rosen, aged 17. Little Miss Rosen will have been in this country then a little more than two years. She is a child of luxury, but it cannot be said that during her stay here she had what an American girl would call a play spell.

Miss Rosen's winters have been passed in Washington, her summer home is on the Massachusetts coast. This sounds attractive enough. One has to consider besides, in her case, five hours a day of hard study, exclusive of time devoted to music and art. For recreation there have been two long walks each day, one with a governess speaking French and one with a secretary speaking English. No society, no theaters, no meeting company at home.

Miss Elizabeth knows French, Italian, German and English. She does not know the language of free young girlhood. She knows what is classical in music, but not what is joyous in the young maidenly romp. During her two years in the choicest center of American life she has made no friends of her own age.

She is the Baroness Elizabeth Rosen, daughter of the Russian ambassador. Because of her accomplishments she will make a brilliant debut at St. Petersburg next winter.

PARLOR-BRED PIGS

OHIO MAN IS TO TEST A NEW THEORY.

Believes That the Animal Is Naturally a Lover of Cleanliness,—But Has Never Been Given a Chance to Prove It.

R. K. Rutter of Lexington, O., has leaped into fame at one jump by announcing that hereafter he is going to keep the pig in the parlor, says the Chicago Record-Herald. Mr. Rutter, from advices from the correspondent at Lexington, is a man with a theory. His idea as he has evolved it is that pigs are naturally lovers of cleanliness, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding.

He will attempt to prove his theory by taking six tiny little porkers and bringing them to bright adult age in his parlor. They will never know the contamination of the muddy slough and the pen. They will be raised as real ladies and gentlemen and then turned loose to choose their future career in the parlor or in the muddy bog. Mr. Rutter is willing to bet dollars to doughnuts that the swine will give the merry "oof-oof" to the muddy hog and waddle back to the parlor.

Mr. Rutter says that pigs are set down by the unthinking as being lovers of dirt because usually all their early environment is dirt. The ordinary or garden variety of pig, says Mr. Rutter, has never had an opportunity to show that naturally he is neat and tidy. Pig raisers take it for granted that hogs love mud and dirt and they do not permit them to demonstrate to the contrary.

The six pigs that Mr. Rutter is about to adopt, to demonstrate his parlor raising theory, are to be plucked from the pen before they even get their young eyes open to see the vile dirt lying all about them.

They are to be hurriedly rushed to the parlor, and when for the first time they look about they will see nothing but Turkish rugs and silk sofa cushions and beautiful pictures.

Mr. Rutter is going to surround his merry little guests with only the most attractive environment. Coming to maturity as they will, surrounded always with the gentle environment of a cultured home, Mr. Rutter does not believe that his piggies will after they are grown up ever depart from it. He is going to give them a nice hot bath with perfumed toilet soap and Florida water every day. They will have their little bristles brushed with military hair brushes, and their teethies will be diligently scrubbed with an ivory-handled toothbrush.

"Their Teethies Will Be Scrubbed."

Each little pig will have his hoofies manicured three times a week, and wear pink ribbons on its tail. Any little pig that doesn't keep its hair parted and its snout clean will be in disgrace and can't eat at the table for a week.

For Recreation Mr. Rutter will lead the piggies for a walk every afternoon on the graveled path in front of the house. After they are old enough to sit up and notice things intelligently, he is going to take them out in his automobile. Every night Mr. Rutter will gather the little piggies around him and read to them from Bacon, and Barrow, and Swinerton, and other standard and appropriate authors and sing to them such dear old songs as "Higgiety Pigglety" and "Ah Certenly Do Luh Ham," and give little talks from such subjects as "The Pen Is Mightier Than the Sword" and "Cheer Up, There Are Many Hogs with Only Two Legs.".

For diet the Rutter swine will not be fed in a vulger trough. They will eat sterilized food from chemically cleaned plates and wear nice little sterilized bibs so as not to spill food on their clean little feet so that visitors might call them dirty little pigs.

And after they are raised to full swine maturity Mr. Rutter knows that his parlor grown pigs will not go back to the low wallow of their ancestors. They will never loaf around the trough at night ready to swill up anything in sight. They will not be muck rakers or rooters or anything like that that. They will look down towards the pens of their relatives and grunt their disapproval and hasten back to the parlor and make a noise like a cake of soap.

Turned the Tables.

In a crowd waiting for a car at Eleventh street and Grand avenue yesterday was an old negro, who was inclined to be discursive. Two high school boys believed they saw a chance to make fun of him, and made several remarks at which they themselves laughed heartily. Finally one of them said: "You're a preacher, aren't you, uncle?"

"Yas, sah," replied the negro, bringing forth a card. "Ah'm a undertaker, too. Ah don't wish you no bad luck, but Ah'd lak teh have yo' business."

Poor Paint is Expensive

If one is rich enough to repaint his buildings every year for the pleasure of having a change of color scheme, the quality of the paint used may cut little figure. But if it is desirable to cut the painting bills down to the least amount possible per year, it is of the utmost importance that the paint be made of Pure White Lead and the best of Linseed Oil. There are imitations in the form of alleged White Lead, and there are substitutes in the form of ready-prepared paints.

We guarantee our White Lead to be absolutely pure, and the Dutch Boy on the side of every keg is your safeguard. Look for him.

I would like very much to personally meet every reader of this paper who owns any horses that have sore shoulders and tell him about Security Gall Salve. This is impossible so I am going to tell you through the paper.

You and I both know that horses working with sore shoulders are in pain, and that they can't do as much work without running down as when they are free from pain. I also know perfectly well that Security Gall Salve will cure these shoulders, but you do not know it. If you did you would buy a box of your dealer at once and cure them up, for you have no doubt often wished that you knew of something you could rely on. You can rely absolutely on Security Gall Salve. It will do its work every time, or if you prefer to try it first I will mail you a sample can free. Just write for it—it will go to you on first mail.

Also I want to tell you that Security Antiseptic Healer is as good for barb wire cuts as Security Gall Salve is for harness galls. Dealers carry them in 25c, 50c and $1.00 sizes. Use them for your needs; I guarantee you perfect satisfaction.

"Hear! Hear!"

The parliamentary "Hear, hear!" was not always an expression of approval. So one learns from Dr. Murray's dictionary. The phrase was originally "Hear him, hear him!" used as an exclamation to call attention to a speaker's words. We have a record of its use in 1689 and as late as 1763. A member of the house of commons in 1768, being interrupted in a speech by a "Hear!" retorted, "That very word, 'Hear!' I dread of all others," and a member in 1770 referred to its use as "disorderly." The unabridged form, "Hear him!" was in use so late as the beginning of the century. Lord Stanhope tells us, in his "Life of Pitt," that when that statesman reappeared in the house of commons in May, 1803, after a long absence in opposition, he was hailed as he passed up the gangway with cries of "Hear him!" Francis Horner, who was in the strangers' gallery, noted as a remarkable thing that when Pitt rose to deliver his memorable speech on that occasion he was cheered—met with cries of "Hear him!"—before he had uttered a word. We have warmer blood nowadays.—London Chronicle.

Told of President McKinley.

The love which Mrs. McKinley bore her husband was so much the ruling passion of her life that she was extremely sensitive about him. In spite of herself she was jealous even of the demands which the public made upon his time. Her love was matched by a most unusual devotion on the part of the president, as this incident illustrates. Colonel John N. Taylor of East Liverpool, O., a lifelong friend of Mr. McKinley, who was known in Washington as "the man who had a latchkey to the White House," took his little granddaughter, Pauline Taylor, aged three, to the executive mansion for a visit.

She climbed upon Mr. McKinley's knee and soon discovered his watch. Then she pried open the back of the case, as if looking for something.

"Why, Mr. President," she lisped, "it's empty! My papa has my mamma's picture in his watch."

Mrs. McKinley's face fell on the instant, but the president was not found wanting.

"I carry my wife's picture in my heart, Pauline," he said quietly, and Mrs. McKinley was all smiles again.—New York Tribune.

A Hole In the Ballad.

Conjurer—You saw me put your watch in your handkerchief?

Small Boy (on stage)—Yes.

"You can feel it still in the handkerchief?"

"Yes."

"You can hear it ticking?"

"Yes, but"—

"But what?"

"My watch hasn't been going since I took the works out at school."

The word "slothful" is rather a misnomer, for in its native habitat—a large tree—a sloth can and does travel very rapidly.

SCHREITER'S PHARMACY

No Reduced Fair Rates.

The state fair this year will not result in any reductions in railroad fares. Visitors will be compelied to pay the full fare of 2 cents a mile, which will mean a greater expense than under the old regular price cf 3 cents per mile. Present rates will hold good all during fair week. Round trip tickets for one fair used to be the rule.

The one advantage under the new system will be that visitors will be allowed to stay as long as they please in the Twin cities, for as they are paying the regular rates, the railroads will not be in a position to put a limit on the time they mus. return home. In cutting off the special privelege tickets the railroads are carrying out their idea of cutting off all reduced rates while the 2-cent law is in effect.

Write Things Down.

All persons find their memories deceptive in some particular. If it is not dates that one forgets it is names, and the best help to memory is to write down the things one one is apt to forget. Not that the memorandum is ever looked at again —but the act of writing a thing down is likely to impress it on the memory Write it down now that you should order a case of golden grain belt beer or, better still, do it now before you have a chance to forget. DRIVING IS DIFFICULT.

Red Lake River is Very Low At Present Time.

Crookston Times: If the present stage of the Red Lake river is not improved before long, the big sawmill of the Crookston Lumber company, and the mill of the Grand Forks Lumber company at East Grand Forks will have to depend on shipments of logs by rail to a greater extent thaa for several years. River Boss Pat Sullivan passed through the city yesterday enroute to Crooks Rapids about two miles above Red Lake Falls with an additional crew to assist in bringing down a drive ef 3,500,000 logs.

He says the river there is at a lower stage than he has seen for many years, at this season, and it is lower here than for a number of years. In view of the fact that there have been copious rains all summer it is hard to discover why the water is so low.

The existing conditions make the progress of the drive very slow, and it will be about three weeks before the drive will reach Crookston, and several more before it will reach Grand Forks unless there will be some very heavy rains which are not expected. Unless the stage of water is higher than at the present time, this will be the last big drive that will be brought dowa the Red Lake river this year, though there are millioas of logs to be driven down should the river be in better shape later.

AUDITOR IS BUSY

New Tax Commission Makes Large Amount Of Extra Office Work.

The new state tax commission in its demands upon the county auditors of the state, is creating a large amount of additional work in which the commission is making no adequate returns and in no county has the additional burden been harder on the clerical force than in Red Lake. The auditors office in Red Lake county has for several years past been experiencing a steady increase in its official business, the increase being largely due in the last two or three years to the large amount of ditching ordered by the county board and the new towns added to the county. This with the regular work which comes to an office fast approaching the border line beyond which additional hire is permitted, has been a heavy strain upon the small force under the auditor. Now, with only a few days to complete the equalization of the work of the town assessors required under the law, the state tax commission, which is a new broom, comes in with requests which would tax to the limit the work force of any county auditor in the state. The state tax commission is a new board authorized by the laws of 1907, and is supposed to perform the labors of the state auditors in reviewing the work of county boards of equalization and abatement, and much more, since its creation was the out growth of a desire to give the state a more equal system of taxation on both real and personal property. Under the law the commission exercises general supervision over the administration of the assessment and taxation laws, over assessors, town, county and city boards of reviews, to the end that all assessments may be made just. As it was late for the state commission to make any departure this year from the established custom of assessing property, the new body commences with with boards of review and the valuation of personal property. One of its first demands on county auditors is a complete statement from the 1907 assessment rolls of the personal property of each tax payer in the county, the returns to be furnished by August 20. Without this, the state commission says, it can make no true scientific valuation or equalization. In remuneration the commission offers 75 cents per 100 names which is about half the value of the work required. The commission further requests samples of every blank, sheet, form, blank page of record books, these to be used for comparison, preliminery to preparing a uniform system of blanks. Certified copies of proceedings of county boards of equalization are demanded, in addition to a great deal of other information. While county auditors are hurrying to fill this rush order, none of the clerks are going fishing or indulging in day dreams.

PLANK IS BUSTED

Famous Anti-injunction Johnson Deserts His Campaign Thunder Machine.

The unexpected has happened. After being elected on a widely proclaimed "anti-injunction" plank, Red Lake county's brilliant but busted court commissioner has fallen by the wayside and yesterday aided and abetted the Thief River partisans in a scheme to saddle another bill of expense upon the taxpayers. The duties of the office of court commissioner have rested heavily upon this Yankee with the misleading name, and the only reason that he hasn't already saved the county from eternal ruin is because of the fact that he has strictly evaded the law, and not maintained an office at the county seat where all these high-handed depredations are being carried on.

However, he has assiduously rested upon one end of his famous "anti-injunction" plank at all times and the added prestige his title has given him has enabled him to hold his end of the plank down safely and serenely.

But then, too, there was a reason for this. After the recent campaign the Thief River grafters figured that all they had to do was come down and take the county seat and anything else they needed, and in their hurry they entirely forgot their weighty "anti-injunction" commissioner. Baffled in their attempts to get that which belongs to them not, they now turn to the only remedy, and the way their heavy-weight county seat committeemen landed on the tother end of that "anti-injunction" plank was a caution, and even the extreme importance of their own court commissioner was insufficient to keep it from breaking square off.

The result is that an injunction has been filed restraining the auditor from calling a meeting of the county commissioners to act on the county seat removal petition that the Thief River bunch so neatly and cutely made away with this spring. The order is made returnable before Judge Watts next Tuesday, the 20th and is made at the instigation of M. V. Evenson, who alleges that county Auditor O'Brien has "threatened" to call a meeting of the board to act on this old petition.

Thus it is that Thief River has again dragged the county seat question into the courts, and with it, of course, a big bill for the taxpayer to pay in the end. In doing this they have also lowered the colors of their own important court officer, and shattered his hopes of some day being elected to coroner or some other important office. Johnson was elected on a clearly "anti-injunction" platform and now that his plank is shattered beyond repair, the problem is what will become of him who was so determined to save the country.

The new phase of the case simply means another legal battle, which will of course be fought out to the limit. Thief River has long hollered how Red Lake Falls rushed into the courts on every provocation, but in this case they will attempt to pull the wool over Mr. Taxpayer's eyes by telling him that their actions are justified.

But the court commissioner, and his broken plank—the picture is too sad to long contemplate—let's draw the veil to shield him.

AVERAGE IS HIGH

Crop Expert Writes Regarding Conditions In The Red River Valley.

John Inglis, the crop expert, who has been making a careful investigation of conditions in the Red River Valley in the past few days, and who is considered as one of the most conservative men in the business, has sent a dispatch to the Chicago Inter-Ocean in which he states that the crops in the Red River Valley are above average and is the best crop in years.

The cool weather during the past week has had a very beneficial effect on the spring wheat crop of the Northwest, and the reports which now come as to the conditions of the grain are encouraging. In the Red River Valley, the outlook is as good as could be hoped for at this time. The grain is just filling, and of course it is too early to tell how it is going to turn out, but there are no unfavorable signs, and the showers and low temperature are what are needed at present. The stories of black rust in the Northwest are either entirely false or greatly exaggerated as no complaints of damages from that cause are now heard. Reports from all sections of the Northwest now point to an average crop and the indications are that the farmers will get higher prices than last year so that an average crop would be fully as valuable as a bumper crop when prices are lower. The August government report will be issued next Saturday, and there will be much interest taken in its figures on the spring wheat conditions.

The winter wheat yields are expected to be lower than a year ago, and it is claimed now that the August government report will show an average yield per acre of about 13 busels for the entire winter wheat area, suggesting a total crop of about 370,000,000 bushels, or about 112,000,000 bushels less than the crop of 1906. But this estimate may be too low as highly satisfactory stories of the progress of the crop come from many sections. Bumper corn crops are expected from Nebraska, Iowa, and Illinois, three of the great producing states for this grain.

Indeed cheerful reports come from practically every section of the United States regarding the conditions of all crops thus giving a denial to the predictions made that the late spring had practically destroyed a large part of all the important crops.

The big crops, towards which the conditions now point, will have a mighty influence in continuing the prosperity of the country. With the farmers enjoying good crops and receiving good prices for their grain, there can be no room for pessimism as to the continuance of good times. With a great wheat crop assured, the prosperity of the country will have no setback.

STRIKE ON IRON RANGE

Leader Advises the Use of Guns.

Duluth, Aug. 3. — One working day has passed since operations on the range, following the settlement of the ore dock strike, were begun by the United States Steel corporation and the independent mines, and no serious disorder was reported. The industrial sky over the range is not cloudless, however, for the sullen attitude of the followers of the Western Federation of Miners indicate an attitude of desperation, which was somewhat intensified by a vitriolic address delivered by Petriella, the strike leader, in which, while counseling peace, he advocated the use of guns to maintain what he said was their right to sell their labor where they could to the best advantage.

Advises Violence.

In this address Petriella gave the governor twenty-four hours in which to "grant the men justice," at the end of which time he advised the men to be "ready to strike the head off any man who tries to crush you; if not as American citizens, do it as human beings." Whether at the end of twenty-four hours anything will come of this is awaited with anxiety and the officials are prepared. All of the special guards who have been in Duluth during the past few days were rushed to the range. It was said that 250 men were in the party and they will augment Sheriff Bates' force of deputies in case there is any trouble.

Believe End Is Near.

Duluth, Aug. 3. — While disquieting reports are constantly being sent in from towns on the Mesaba range there is a general feeling in Duluth that the end of the struggle is near at hand, and that inside of a week or eight days everything will be moving along with accustomed regularity. Heavily loaded ore trains came down all day yesterday to the docks at Two Harbors, Oneota and Allonez. The fact that the ore dock strike has been ended paves the way for the end of the miners' strike, for as long as the corporation is able to ship ore it is not believed there will be any further interruption to traffic.

Has Salutary Effect.

The promulgation of Gov. Johnson's proclamation, according to advices received from the range towns, has had a salutary effect, and the strikers, most of them at least, are firmly convinced that if the rules as laid down by the state's chief executive are willfully violated by them, the governor will keep his word and send the troops there immediately. Arrangements have been made whereby two local companies of state guards may be summoned on a moment's notice.

Bids Strikers to Keep the Peace.

St. Paul, Aug. 4.—A working agreement for preserving peace and order on the iron range was outlined in a proclamation issued by Gov. Johnson yesterday. The governor makes it clear that any intimidation or attempts to prevent those who desire from working in the mines, or any trespassing on private property, will be met with the calling out of the troops. On the other hand, the governor wants it understood that the miners have a perfect right as citizens to meet in public halls to discuss the situation, and while parading will not be tolerated, ordinary groups of strikers are to be allowed on the public streets and highways without molestation.

The governor's action in issuing the strike proclamation was largely based on the report of the investigating committee appointed by him to investigate the situation. The committee, consisting of T. D. O'Brien, Harvey Grimmer and C. H. Day, spent a day on the ranges and obtained the views of the strikers and disinterested citizens on the situation. The general feeling seemed to be that the strike would be a peaceful one, despite the fact that Petriella, the strike leader, had instructed the strikers to use violence if necessary to prevent interruption of their meetings.

This Week Will See End of Strike.

Duluth, Aug. 6. — A News-Tribune special from Hibbing says:

"The third week of the strike on the Mesaba range, which was engineered by the Western Federation of Miners, probably will see the last of the conflict. It is believed by those who have been constantly in touch with the situation that the next seven days will witness the culmination of the struggle. The crisis is past, and no further trouble of a serious nature is expected unless something unforeseen occurs."

The Western Federation of Miners has not given up the fight, and the statements in the foregoing must not be construed as indicating that it will abandon the purposes which gave birth to the strike.

Miners Not Disheartened.

On the contrary, the leaders are entering into the third week of the labor difficulty with renewed vigor.

The federation on the range is now led by the national secretary, C. E. Mahoney. He has prepared several thousand circulars which will be given to every miner, urging them to continue the conflict with the Steel corporation. He advances the claim that the federation is gathering new recruits every day. The federation is preparing for a big labor conflict two years hence, following the presidential election.

About 2,000 miners, it is expected, will return to work Monday morning.

Quiet Now Prevails.

Within a few days all of the open pits of the Steel corporation will be shipping 80 per cent of the ore mined by that corporation on the Mesaba range. The independents are working all of their open pits.

In the Eveleth-Sparta-Virginia district the miners will resume work in the underground mines. The situation on the Mesaba range east of Chisholm is more satisfactory than in the Hibbing and Chisholm districts, and nearly all of the local deputies have been discharged from further service. In order to maintain the peaceful status that prevails at the Hibbing-Chisholm district, deputies imported by the United States Steel corporation, under Sheriff Bates, will remain on duty.

Strikers Are Landed in Jail.

Duluth, Minn., Aug. 7. — Twenty-three strikers were arrested at Hibbing last night, charged with threatening to blow up an Austrian boarding house. There was a clash between the deputies and the men, but all were landed in jail.

Two strikers were placed under arrest at Eveleth also, charged with intimidation and were lodged in jail pending their preliminary hearing, which was set for 11 a. m. Tuesday.

Approve Proclamation.

Printed proclamations have been distributed among the strikers at Eveleth by the Eastern Federation of Miners, approving the proclamation of Gov. Johnson, and commanding obedience to its mandates.

The printed slips are addressed in bold type to the "strikers," and the proclamation is prefaced by the announcement: "His excellency, the governor of the State of Minnesota, has issued the following proclamation, which henceforth shall govern your actions, as we expect it will rule the actions of our opponents in the industrial field."

Citizens Patrol Streets.

Alarmed by the reports that the strikers would take advantage of the fact that the special deputies had been released, Chief of Police Kent spent several hours yesterday delivering personal summons to each of the 125 citizens who had been previously deputized for guard duty. The result was that when the people of Eveleth awoke yesterday morning they found the streets heavily patrolled, and on all of the roads leading to the mines there were lines of deputies armed with guns, just as they had been during the troublous times of last week.

Were Warned Not to Work.

Eveleth, Minn., Aug. 7.—The latest episode in connection with the strike is the verdict of guilty rendered against Jian Inthart and Matt Petric yesterday afternoon by Judge Prince on charges of attempting to intimidate Anton Laurich and Jake Greber and causing them to abstain from working for the Oliver Iron Mining company, acting upon the advice of John D. Mahanny of the Western Federation of Miners. Notice was given by Attorney J. C. McGilvery that the cases would be appealed to the district court.

On one complaint Inthart was given a fine of $100 or ninety days in the county jail, and on the same complaint Petric was given $25 or thirty days. On the second complaint Inthart was fined $50 and Petric was acquitted.

Jake Greber, Anton Laurich, Joe Lushin, Joe Hren and George Drobnich were the witnesses for the state. All said the defendants went into Laurich's house on Sunday afternoon and asked them if they worked Saturday. The men men said they did work and would work again that night. Then the prisoners told them to "look out for their hides," or words to that effect, in the Austrian language.

County Attorney Norton held that this constituted a threat under the law and Judge Prince by his decision showed that he coincided with this view.

Keep Up Fight for Two Years.

Duluth, Aug. 7. — Teofila Petriella, leader of the Western Federation of Miners, arrived in Duluth last evening.

"We have not been getting a square deal on the Mesaba range, and we propose to continue this strike if it takes two years," he said. "We are bound to win in the end."

She was unconscious for three hours, but it is thought she will recover.

LEGAL BOMB FOR STANDARD OIL

SPECIAL ATTORNEY KELLOGG MAKES CONFIDENTIAL REPORT ON TRUST.

WALL STREET IS NERVOUS

FEAR SOME MAJOR GENERAL OF INDUSTRY MAY BE THROWN INTO JAIL.

Washington, Aug. 10.—An important confidential report in connection with the government's suit for the dissolution of the Standard Oil company is at the department of justice, awaiting the return of Attorney General Bonaparte. It is from Frank B. Kellogg of St. Paul, the special counsel who conducted the investigation into the oil trust management, which culminated in the suit in equity to demolish the trust.

Persons who have kept in touch with this sensational suit hint at the explosion of a legal bomb under the Standard before the taking of testimony is completed, which may not be for four months.

To Take Testimony.

The first testimony in the suit to dissolve the Standard Oil company and allied companies on the ground that they constitute a trust will be taken in New York Sept. 3. Former Judge Franklin Ferris of St. Louis, who was appointed special examiner, has issued an order for the taking of the first testimony, which will mark the actual beginning of the government's fight to overthrow the Standard Oil company.

The federal grand jury will convene at Jamestown, N. Y., this afternoon and report to Judge Hazel its findings in the investigation of the government's charges against the Standard Oil company and the Pennsylvania and the New York Central railroads. The indications are that a number of indictments will be returned.

Wall Street Is Nervous.

New York, Aug. 9. — Apparently Wall street is frantic with apprehension over the possibility that the federal department of justice will put some major general of industry in jail and thus shock the world of finance into a state of numb inactivity.

The sharp decline in quotations Wednesday was without explanation, further than that it was due to heavy selling by holders of railroad and other shares who did not care to retain their securities at this time. There was nothing to show whether their desire to sell was because they were tired of waiting for the upward movement of prices, because of the low supplies of money, or because of depressed sentiment in Wall street over the difficulties in which many corporations find themselves with the national and state governments.

Prices Plunge Downward.

A futile effort to sustain prices gave way to downward plunges in which raiding tactics by the bears were indicated by the feverish recovery.

The speculators for the decline used as their principal fresh ammunition reports from Washington of the intention of the department of justice to push criminal prosecutions against certain heads of corporations. The violence to the collapse in prices gave rise to the usual anxiety over possible embarrassment, but no such trouble developed.

PEACEMAKER IN JAIL.

Started Argument and Ended by Killing His Prospective Father-in-law.

New York, Aug. 10.—Losing his temper because his efforts as a peacemaker did not succeed, Edward O. Mulvaney knocked down and killed his prospective father-in-law, Robert Sealander, a contractor. The killing was the outcome of a quarrel between Mr. Sealander and his son. Mulvaney, fearing that the disputants would harm each other, intervened. Argument developed and Mulvaney and Sealander adjourned to the street to settle their quarrel. Mulvaney struck Sealander a powerful blow on the head, knocking him down. The contractor died shortly afterward. Mulvaney was taken into custody.

CHANCE FOR EXTRA SESSION

LEGISLATURE MAY BE CALLED AFTER JUDGE LOCHREN ISSUES INJUNCTION.

St. Paul, Aug. 10.—An extra session of the Minnesota legislature is still a decided probability. It need not surprise any one if Gov. Johnson calls the house and senate together in extraordinary session some time in September or October.

No action will be taken in any event until Judge Lochren has given his decision on the temporary injunction in the stockholders' cases. It is taken for granted that he will at least issue the injunction against the commodity rate law, which he has tied up now by a temporary restraining order. The case comes up Sept. 3; arguments will probably last several days, and a decision on the temporary injunction will come shortly after. Judging by his action so far, it seems certain that the judge will grant the stockholders' plea.

Counting on this action, plans are being discussed for calling the legislature together immediately after the decision comes down. Gov. Johnson has the matter under serious consideration.

WISCONSIN MOB MAY LYNCH MAN

CADOTT POSSE HUNTS ALLEGED ASSAILANT OF 15-YEAR-OLD GIRL.

LIFE SENTENCE FOR MURDERER

Chippewa Falls, Wis., Aug. 8. — In the vicinity of Cadott, a small town on the Wisconsin Central line, there is in progress a manhunt that may terminate in a lynching as the sequel of a brutal assault upon a fifteen-year-old girl.

Mand Tantaui, the victim of the assault, accuses John Lyons, who Monday night was arrested by the town marshal. Fearing mob violence and believing that the town and lockup would prove inadequate to resist possible attack, the peace officer took his prisoner to the hotel for the night. Before morning Lyons had escaped.

Posse on the Hunt.

Yesterday a posse was formed by residents of Cadott and farmers living in the vicinity. Lyons is believed to be in hiding not far from the town, and as the search for him continues the anger of the men seems to be rising, and threats of violence grow in number.

The Tantaut girl says that she was attacked when in the road near her sister's home. Frightened by a noise, her assailant left her, and she managed to reach the home of her sister, to whom she told her story.

Lyons was in Cadott last night and when news of the attack on the girl became known he was arrested

Given Life Sentence.

Wausau, Wis., Aug. 7. — Rudolph Fullhweiler, self-confessed murderer of Jennie Reihle, yesterday was sentenced to life imprisonment in the state prison at Waupun. Fullhweiler appeared before Judge Marchetti at Wausau Monday and waived preliminary examination, admitting his guilt and refusing to have witnesses testify.

Public feeling against the man has been high, and threats of lynching have been made frequently.

The crime was one of the most brutal ever committed in Marathon county.

Crime Wave Unchecked.

New York, Aug. 7.—More of what have come to be seriously known at police headquarters as "near" crimes against girls were followed by nearer lynchings yesterday. Out of the score of complaints that reached the police a half dozen demanded serious attention. Whether the number is extraordinary is disputed, but certain it is that never before has mob vengeance so frequently attended attacks upon children.

Led by a woman who alternately in Italian and broken English cried, "Avenge my daughter!" a reckless crowd of perhaps 2,000 persons last night stormed the Fourteenth street car barns of the Metropolitan Street Railway company, where a policeman had sought refuge with a seriously pummeled prisoner.

Paul Sorgeraior, a Greek peddler had made the mistake, it is alleged, of kissing Grace Jenco, an Italian of eleven years. Police reserves stood off the mob while the Greek was bustled into a patrol wagon. Through a crowd that cried "Kill him!" "Lynch him!" the police fought their way to the nearest station house. Cheated of their man, the crowd vented its fury on Gnnton Keriskel, an unoffending workman, homeward bound. As he was passing the rioters a boy pointed him out, at the same time yelling: "That's the man's friend. He was there, too." Kerinkel was pounded until he was unconscious. The police reserves finally got the injured man and removed him to a hospital.

INJURY DUE TO MEDDLER.

Auto Backs When Woman Starts It; Is Hurled Out and Run Down.

Sheboygan, Wis., Aug. 8. — Miss Katherine Msilman was painfully injured in a peculiar automobile accident. She had left her auto standing by the curb while she went into a church, and during her absence a small boy who was examining the machine inadvertently reversed the controller. When Miss Moliman stepped into the car and inserted the connecting pin the machine at once started backward, throwing Miss Maliman to the ground. The machine turned a complete circle, and before the young woman could arise the car struck her. She was badly crushed and bruised, but it is believed that she sustained no serious injuries.

ADMITS GIRL'S MURDER.

Jennie Reihle's Slayer Tells of Brutal Crime.

Milwaukee, Aug. 7. — Rudolph Fullweiler, under arrest at Wausau on the charge of murdering sixteen-year-old Jeanie Reihle, has confessed. Copies of his two confessions were received yesterday by a detective agency which has been investigating the murder.

Fullweiler also appeared before Judge Marchetti at Wausau and waived preliminary examination, admitting his guilt and refusing to have a witness testify. The Wausau authorities will endeavor to have him sentenced as soon as possible, as public feeling against the man has been high.

The crime was one of the most brutal ever committed in Marathon county. Jennie Reihle lived on a farm four miles from Stratford, near Wausau. On Sunday, June 30, she went to church in Wausau. It was on the way back that she was attacked by Fullweiler, who had made previous advances to her.

In his signed statement Fullweiler admits committing criminal assault and murder, the latter being accomplished by choking the girl.

FROG EATS DYNAMITE.

Man Stepped on Frog and Was Hurled in Air by Explosion.

Chippewa Falls, Wis., Aug. 7.—The question of whether a frog ate dynamite is puzzling the residents of Emet. While stumps were being blown out of a new road, ten pounds of dynamite disappeared mysteriously. Yesterday George Humber accidentally stepped on a bullfrog, which exploded instantly, tearing a large hole in the ground and hurling him several hundred feet. He came down on a soft spot, and beyond being shaken up was uninjured. While some of the farmers are positive that the frog ate some of the dynamite the more conservative are of the opinion that the frog was probably only feasting upon the explosive when Humber came along.

RED WING MAN LOSES LIFE.

Body of A. G. Freirmuth Recovered With Grapple He Himself Made.

Red Wing, Minn., Aug. 7.—Anton F. Freirmuth lost his life yesterday by drowning in the Mississippi river a short distance below the high bridge. He was being towed up stream by a fishing party when the chain of his boat broke, with the result that his skiff capsized. The launch hurried to Freirmuth's assistance, but the engine broke down just when the men in the launch were about to rescue him. The body was raised from the water by E. C. Erh by means of a grappling hook made by Mr. Freirmuth early this spring.

He had a hearing before a justice of the peace and the evidence showed that he used a heavy piece of a harness to punish the boy. The little fellow's body was brought into evidence and showed great welts and bruises all over the back and body. Warren was found guilty and fined $10 and costs.

HAVOC IS CAUSED BY FIERCE STORM

WIND AND HAIL CAUSES GREAT DAMAGE IN WISCONSIN AND MINNESOTA.

GRAIN POUNDED INTO EARTH

St. Paul, Aug. 8.—Following twenty-four hours of severe electrical storms in various parts of Wisconsin and Minnesota, terrific wind and rain swept down on portions of Minnesota, Iowa and Wisconsin late yesterday afternoon, doing immense damage to crops and buildings. Several persons are reported to have been hurt, though only one death was reported up to a late hour last night.

Telegraph and telephone companies were among the heaviest sufferers, communication being interrupted for several hours, and the Associated Press wires were out of commission until almost midnight.

In several cities the electric light and telephone service were destroyed, and in other towns street car traffic was made impossible by the blocking of the streets by uprooted trees.

Winona Suffers Heavily.

Winona was the greatest sufferer from which accurate information could be obtained, though no lives were reported lost, and as far as was known last night nobody was seriously injured. The damage there was over $100,000.

Bridges were ruined by the storm, and the rain in some instances amounted almost to a cloudburst. Cars were blown from the tracks, and near Kiester, Minn., it was reported that a herd of fifty cattle was lifted bodily from the ground and carried into an adjoining pasture.

During the storms, which were of short duration, rain fell with terrific force, and between this cause and the wind great damage was done to crops of all kinds. Grain was pounded into the earth and corn was stripped clean.

Lack of means of communication made it impossible to obtain complete details of the storms last night.

Three Distinct Cyclones.

Des Moines, Aug. 7.—Clear Lake, Hanlontown and Mills City were struck by a cyclone shortly after 6 o'clock last evening. Reports of damage from the latter two places are meager, as all wires are down. It is reported, however, that buildings have been demolished and several persons killed.

At Clear Lake the daughter of G. E. Rice was struck by a flying timber and probably fatally injured.

STEAL FIVE HORSES.

Raid of Rustlers' Band Causes Talk of Vigilance Committee.

Mandan, N. D., Aug. 8. — Frank Welch of South Little Heart reports that rustlers have stolen five head of valuable horses from his ranch. There appears to be a well organized band of horse and cattle thieves operating in this section and numerous other ranchers recently have reported stock losses. There is no clue to the thieves in the present instance. The county officials are making an investigation and the ranchmen are talking of organizing a vigilance committee.

ROSS CLARKE ENDS HIS LIFE.

Prominent St. Paul Man Was Despondent Over Family Affairs.

St. Paul, Aug. 8.—Ross Clarke, fifty-three years old, a resident of St. Paul more than twenty years and prominently known in public and political life, was found dead in bed at his summer home at White Bear at 5:40 yesterday afternoon. There is much evidence that he ended his own life by taking poison. He was known to have been despondent over family matters, and last Saturday stated that he had decided to kill himself and nothing could change his mind.

IS NEAR $260,000,000.

South Dakota Assessment Within Half a Million of Estimate.

Pierre, S. D., Aug. 8.—The total assessment of the state this year will be within $500,000 of the estimate of $260,000,000. At least the figures, without the changes of the state board, show that amount, and of this $236,000,000 is on general property, leaving the balance as the corporate property. Representatives of different counties appeared to ask for changes in the assessments, the Black Hills being interested in mining lands, which were not changed from last year's figures.

It is said a letter from home caused the act.

State News of Interest

PRICES BREAK RECORD.

Sale of State Fair Concessions Held Last Week.

The greatest privilege sale in the history of the Minnesota state fair was held last week at the grounds. Last year it was thought that it would be hard to equal the enormous total of sales, but this year's prices ranged from 25 to 50 per cent higher than in 1906.

Supt. Lyman D. Baird called the first lot for sale about 10:30 in the morning. Men who have made the sale of merchandise at fairs a business all over the country were present, elbowing ladies representing the churches of the two cities who sought to secure locations for church eating booths, which are so popular during fair week. Many of the people had made money at former Minnesota fairs, and knew well what the choice positions were worth. They bid eagerly and ran the price up without delay.

By noon the sales had run up 37 1-2 per cent ahead of last year for the same lots. The crowd in the afternoon was even larger, and the remaining spaces brought very good figures, sometimes nearly doubling the 1906 prices. The old dining hall, which has been used for all sorts of purposes of late years, will be a dining hall again this year, and the buyer paid $1,240 for the concession.

HOW HARDY IS THE GREEN BUG?

Uncertainty as to Whether Grain Pest Can Withstand Winter Cold.

Prof. F. L. Washburn, entomologist at the state experiment farm, has had men in the field tracing the progress of the green bug in the Northwest. The area covered by the insect is an important consideration, in view of the uncertainty attending the visitation and doubt as to whether or not the bug will be exterminated by the winter weather or will live through to reappear in the spring.

Fergus Falls, Breckenridge, Wolverton and Grand Forks have the green bug in nearby grain fields. This does not mean that damage of importance has been done. On the contrary, Prof. Washburn is of the opinion that the damage on the whole from this source in the Northwest this year will not be material. But for those who are interested in the insect and its bearing upon the crops, the report will be surprising, for it has not generally been supposed that the green bug had reached so far beyond the original source of infection, which was in Southern Minnesota.

The bug reached the Northwest too late to affect the crops at all seriously. Entomologists will now find an interesting and practical study before them in the determination of whether or not it will survive the cold weather.

WAR ON BAD FOOD.

Butcher and Grocer Are Caught by State Inspectors.

The inspectors of the state dairy and food department are waging a strong campaign to enforce obedience to the provisions of every section of the pure food laws in the state, and a number of cases are pending in which violations of the law are sought to be established and punished. Of two recent convictions one was for selling bad meat and the other was for refusing to take out a license to sell milk.

A Montevideo man was fined $50 and costs for selling mutton in such a pronounced state of putrefaction as to be utterly unfit for food. Other seizures of impure meat have been made and the department is preparing for the trial of these cases. The inspectors are instructed to keep watch for impure food offered for sale.

Inspector A. Palmquist, stationed in Minneapolis, has reported the fining of a grocer for refusing to take out a milk license. The inspector reports that he notified the dealer that he must take out a license, and after several warnings, upon his refusal to comply, the warrant was sworn out and the grocer was fined. The cost of the license is $1.

FIX GOODHUE FAIR RATES.

Zumbrota Merchants Contribute to Amusement Fund.

At a recent meeting of the officers of the Goodhue County Fair association, held in Zumbrota, it was decided to hold the annual fair in Zumbrota on Sept. 18, 19 and 20. The merchants of Zumbrota have subscribed $600 to the fund, which amount will be added to the state appropriation and spent in amusements. The feature of the fair will be a band concert, for the winners of which liberal cash prizes will be given.

BIG STONE TO HAVE FAIR.

County Agricultural Association Fixes Oct. 2-4 as Dates.

Big Stone county will have a three days' fair. At a meeting of the officers of the Big Stone County Agricultural association at Clinton it was decided to hold a county fair at Clinton Oct. 2, 3 and 4. Superintendents of divisions and committees were appointed, and strong efforts will be made to make the coming fair the best exhibit of farm produce and stock that has been made by the county.

COUNTY EXHIBIT AT FAIR.

Fourteen Counties Will Be Represented—Everything Points to Big Fair.

Fourteen county exhibits are to be made at the coming Minnesota state fair. This is the largest number ever made at any Minnesota fair—a fact which shows the continued growth of the fair and the interest felt among the various counties of the state. The large exhibit was reported to the board of managers of the fair by J. M. Underwood, superintendent of the agricultural and horticultural divisions of the fair.

Reports from all the superintendents present were received and the consensus showed that all the claims heretofore made this summer for a greatly enlarged fair have ample foundation in hard facts. William E. Lee, superintendent of manufactures and farm machinery, said that all the buildings in his division were full and all the space formerly used by the department out of doors had been assigned. In addition he had some forty applications for exhibition space which would be assigned to the new ground recently purchased as soon as it was platted. This new ground will be one of the handsomest and most attractive parts of the fair grounds. It is being pierced by two wide avenues and two miles of cement walk will be laid down. The poultry building will stand on this part of the fair grounds and ample sanitation will be afforded by the sewer system, which will extend into its midst.

As the new lighting system will give abundant light, this as well as all other parts of the grounds will be well illuminated at night. It is in this part of the grounds that the great air ship will have its stopping place, and from which it will rise on its daily flights.

Mr. Lee's report was echoed by the other superintendents. J. J. Furlong said that the main and woman's buildings were already filled, and G. W. Patterson and Col. W. M. Liggett, reporting respectively for the horse and cattle divisions, affirmed that their departments would want more space than ever. D. S. Hall reviewed his plans for police protection, and C. M. Griggs described the improvements around the grand stand and reported fourteen excellent attractions engaged for the stage entertainment.

The board during the day authorized the purchase of wheeled chairs for use during the fair. These will be for rent, and with men to push them will doubtless prove a popular way of seeing the fair.

Another innovation will be named streets and signs at all points, directing the visitor to this and that building in the vicinity. The board decided to again have a bureau of information and made plans for the postoffice which has been maintained for some years during the fair. Last year the postoffice handled over 15,000 pieces of mail and issued nearly $5,000 of money orders.

STATE LOANS $60,000.

Investment Board Has Applications for $200,000.

The state investment board granted applications for loans of state funds aggregating about $60,000 for school and other county purposes and received applications amounting to about $200,000 for county drainage projects. The applications for drainage loans were not acted on and will be taken up at a later meeting of the board, so that the question of granting these loans can be investigated somewhat. The applications for loans for drainage ditches were nearly all from the counties in the northern part of the state.

Of the applications for loans granted by the board, Red Lake county will get $10,000 to refund bonds. Hallock received $10,000 for a new school building. Otter Tail county receives $5,000 for a new school, the other loans being for amounts ranging from $500 to $1,200.

WILL GO AFTER SETTLERS.

State Immigration Board Organizes for Work.

The recently organized state immigration board met at the capitol and prepared to take up its work by the appointment of Neil O'Brien of Minneapolis as clerk with a salary of $1,200 and Mrs. Grace Gallagher of Duluth as stenographer with a salary of $900 a year. George Welch of Morton, the commissioner of immigration appointed by the board a few days ago, will be given office room for his department in the new capitol, probably in one of the legislative committee rooms.

The board decided to purchase 500 copies of Miss Julia C. Gaultier's illustrated guide book to the capitol. The books will be distributed among the visiting delegates to the national convention of the Odd Fellows which meets in St. Paul in September.

A Big Sturgeon.

The largest sturgeon which has ever been landed at Aberdeen, was exposed for sale recently, at the fish market. The fish was caught by a local trawler, at the northern fishing grounds, and when weighed at Aberdeen turned the scale at 560 pounds. It was nine feet, three inches in length, by about five feet in girth, and was sold by auction. Bidding was keen, and at £9 5s the sturgeon was knocked down.

GEORGE ADE says he is making money faster than he can spend it. George neither runs a newspaper nor owns race horses.

THE Johnson family is doing pretty well politically. Governor Joe Johnson of Alabama has been elected United States Senator.

Scotland has eliminated vertical writing from its schools. It is about time this fad has run its course but it is too bad that the harm done millions of children can never be corrected.

CHANCELLOR DAY has nothing to say about the Standard Oil fine. This may be because the Doctor doesn't know but that Rockefeller may conclude to pay his fine by eliminating his educational and ecclesiastical beneficiaries rather than by raising the price on his wares.

THE Detroit Record observes that "the strike of the miners on the iron range is all over, just as we prophesied it would be when we heard of Governor Johnson's intended visit. As a pacifier John A. Johnson stands in a class by himself and about the only people (seemingly) who dislike the fact, are the poor fellows who have to count the votes when Mr. Johnson runs for office."

THE Minneapolis Journal observes that "wealth after all is a relative thing. A man on a salary of a thousand a year who is keeping ahead of the game, spending something less than he earns, and accumulating a little, meanwhile enjoying health and an appetite, is not so bad off relatively as that young scion of wealth whose yearly income is $125,000 and who is reported to be pulling aside from social obligations for a time because he had been living at a rate of $180,000 a year and he finds he cannot keep it up."

EIGHT Mormon elders made a raid on Marshall and from all appearance the town is there yet. Bro. C. C. Whitney does not think their proselyting amounted to anything. Here is what Bro. Whitney's paper says:

From the public utterances of these elders, there seems to be no necessity for their labors, any more than there is reason to oppose their efforts by other denominations or the people at large. They teach the divinities and inspirations of the holy bible, belief in God and Jesus Christ and plead for the leading of a Christian and moral life, with prayer and praise. And this is the teaching of other church denominations nearly all of which are well represented hereabouts, hence we see no need of our Mormon friends butting in where they are not needed or wanted.

IN speaking of the increasing mail order house business the Duluth Herald says that the only effectual way for local merchants in small towns is to do as the mail order houses do: advertise. "How do the mail order houses get the business? By advertising. They advertise skillfully, to make prospective customers believe they sell goods cheaper than home merchants do and many believe it." The trouble with too many merchants is they consider advertising a useless waste of money, without returns, and the way some of them advertise they are right. Proper advertising requires more than a mere announcement that one deals in clothing, groceries or hardware. This is a fact already known to most people, in that vicinity. Business men in big cities never advertise that way. They always go into particulars as to the kind of goods which they intend to push on certain days. They give qualities of goods and they quote prices at which they intend to dispose of the goods, and they invariably get the business. Advertising is as much and more of an art than the selling of goods over the counter and in these times of sharp competition no one can epxect to succeed unless he falls in with the demands of his business.

WHAT WOULD HAPPEN?

Sam Langum, of the Preston Times preaches a sermon nearly every week, and the following is one of his best ones. It is well worth perusing by that large army of foolish men who give no thought to the responsibilities of tomorrow:

Mr. Married Man, did you ever give much thought to what might happen when you died? Did you ever spend much time upon the fact than you were going to die? Did you ever realize that your wife would cease to be your wife and become a widow? Did you comprehend that your children would no longer be your children but would be known as your orphans? If you did grasp these facts which many men try to dodge, did you ever carry your speculations any further, thus wise.

Will my widow wear as good clothes as my wife? Where will the bread come from when the bread winner passes away? Will my orphans have the advantage of my children? It is rather a grim subject —this idea of death. Not dinner conversation at all. It's a pleasant thing to forget. Many people do successfully dodge the subject of their lives. But there is no dodging death itself. It never forgets. It never skips. Rich or poor —mighty or lowly—no matter. It is a fine thing to live. It makes a married man proud to have a home, to dress his wife, to give his children educational advantages and to keep his family in the front rank. It takes money, yes—but its fine for the children, delightful, for the wife, satisfying to the man. But—

When youve run your length, Mr. Married Man, what then? Some day your friends will lay a lily on your chest, heap the praise, the reverence, the kindly tributes that should have been yours through life, upon what is left of you, lay you away and proceed to forget you. But the widow wont forget. When you go to the cemetery will the widow go to the poorhouse? When you pass into the unknown, will your children pass into the asylum. There is no time to decide this but now. Prune a few luxuries. Start a bank account. Save! Leave an income! If you left your wife while alive the law would put you in jail. Death relieves you of the law, but not of the responsibility. Then again, Mr. Man, your saving may not merely be for your widow or your orphans. It may be for yourself. There are such things as blindness, paralysis, insanity. Think it over.

UNFAIR REPORT.

St. Paul Dispatch Publishes Misleading Article.

The St. Paul Dispatch published a dispatch from Crookston stating that a disastrous hail storm had passed over Red Lake county doing a very large amount of damage. The report was entirely untrue, as absolutely no damage has resulted from hail this year, or for several years past. The article attracted the attention of Mayor Duffy, who took the matter up with the Dispatch and wrote the following letter which will undoubtedly cause them to be more careful of what they print regarding Red Lake county matters in the future. The letter is as follows:

August 13, 1907.

St. Paul Dispatch,
St. Paul, Minn.

Gentlemen:

Enclosed I hand you a clipping from your issue of the 12th, dating from Crookston. It strikes me that your Crookston correspondent takes in too much territory, and is really doing Red Lake county, the dairy county of the state, an injustice to send in an article like this. Now, there was no hail or storm in Red county on this date or any days corresponding them. We had a little light shower, which was beneficial and did no damage, and as a patron of your paper and Mayor of this city I feel that a great injustice has been done this community. This is not the only time but has followed for a long series of time. Your correspondent with others at Crookston has got the Red River Valley in very much discredit in talking about their drainage schemes and their overflow and it seems they want to drag in the tributary territory in the same class with themselves. I am sure the patrons of your paper in this city would be thankful if you would confine your correspondent in Crookston to his own territory.

Knows the Reason.

It remained for Sunbeam Hunt to discover the reason why John Eastman is kicking against the product of the Red Lake Falls Milling company being sold at Thief River Falls and THE GAZETTE deems it timely to give Mr. Hunt's comment without [illegible]:

The Thief River Falls News complains that the Thief River Falls people are not patriotic because they use the celebrated "Mascot flour" manufactured at Red Lake Falls instead of the other stuff manufactured in their city. It takes lots of patriotism for a man to eat soggy bread and face an angry house wife when he goes home to dinner, so we suppose the house wives will continue to use Mascot flour even if hubby is in a county seat fight with the manufacturers.

An interesting story comes from Eagle River, in Kewaunee county, Mich. It concerns a farmer and a flock of geese. To prevent a jug of whiskey from breaking while being transported over the roads, he had placed it in a sack of peas. The cork came out, and when the farmer reached home he found that the whiskey had been absorbed by the peas. He threw the peas out in the yard, where unknown to the household, the geese ate them. In the morning the geese lay stark and cold. The wife, thrifty woman, did not cry over spilt milk but proceeded to save what she could from the wreck, and she plucked the geese before throwing away the supposed carcasses. The fowls lay there all day till late in the afternoon when the woman again heard the familiar call, and, looking out, she was amazed to see the flock of birds solemnly parading around the barn-yard arrayed only in their innate modesty. The geese had simply indulged an orgie with with the whiskey soaked peas and were sleeping off their "jag" when found by the farmer. He now has the original flock of featherless geese.

RACE IS FINISHED.

Rainy Lake Road First To Reach the Border.

The railroad construction race to the Canadian border, which has been on between the Duluth, Rainy Lake & Winnipeg and the Minnesota & International roads for more than a year past, came to an end last week.

The Rainy Lake road is the victor. The Minnesota & International does not expect to be able to drive the last spike before Sept. 1, while the rival line was finished last week. The last spike was driven Saturday. Freight trains will begin running immediately, but passenger service will not be installed before Aug. 20, or probably before the first of September.

The new line strikes the border at Ranier and not at International Falls, as many people suppose. Ranier is located on the Rainy river, about two and one-half miles east of International Falls. A bridge at this point connects the Rainy river road with the Canadian Northern, giving direct connection with Winnipeg and other Canadian points.

The completion of the road will be an important event in the history of Duluth. Duluth is the distributing center for the entire region tapped by the Rainy River road. This territory is developing at a rapid rate and offers a fine field for local business interests, particularly the wholesalers and jobbers. In addition to the extensive lumbering industry, the land thru the territory crossed by the road is very fertile, rich in agricultural possibilities.

SISTER ROSE.

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

CHAPTER XVII.—(CONTINUED.)

He paused, and Trudaine again endeavored to speak such words as might show that he was not unworthy of the deadly risk which Lomaque was prepared to encounter. But once more the chief-agent peremptorily and irritably interposed.

"I tell you, for the third time," he said, "I will listen to no expressions of gratitude from you, till I know when I deserve them. It is true that I recollect your father's timely kindness to me—true that I have not forgotten what passed five years since, at your house by the river side. I remember everything, down to what you would consider the veriest trifle—that cup of coffee, for instance, which your sister kept hot for me. I told you then that you would think better of me some day. I know that you do now. But this is not all. You want to glorify me to my face for risking my life for you. I am weary of life. I can't look back to it with pleasure. I am too old to look forward to what is left of it with hope. There was something in that night at your house before the wedding—something in what you said, in what your sister did—which altered me. I have had my days of gloom and self-reproach, from time to time, since then. I have sickened at my slavery, and subjection, and duplicity, and cringing, first under one master, then under another. I have longed to look back at my life, and comfort myself with the sight of some good action, just as a frugal man comforts himself with the sight of his little savings laid by in an old drawer. I can't do this, and I want to do it. The want takes me like a fit, at uncertain intervals—suddenly, under the most incomprehensible influences. A glance up at the blue sky—starlight over the houses of this great city, when I look out at the night from my garret window—a child's voice coming suddenly, I don't know where from—the piping of my neighbor's linnet in his little cage—now one thing, and then another, wakes up that want in me in a moment. Rascal as I am, those few simple words your sister spoke to the judge went through and through me like a knife. Strange, in a man like me, isn't it? I am amazed at it myself. My life? Bah! I've let it out for hire to be kicked about by rascals from one dirty place to another, like a football! It's my whim to give it a last kick myself, and throw it away decently before it lodges on the dunghill forever. Your sister kept a good cup of coffee hot for me, and I give her a bad life in return. Thank me for it! What folly! Thank me when I have done something useful. Don't thank me for that!"

He snapped his fingers contemptuously as he spoke, and walked away to the outer door to receive the jailer, who returned at that moment.

"Well," inquired the hunchback, "has anybody asked for me?"

"No," said Lomaque; "not a soul has entered the room. What sort of wine did you get?"

"So-so! Good at a pinch, friend—good at a pinch."

"Ah! you should go to my shop and try a certain cask, filled with a particular vintage!"

"What shop? Which vintage?"

"I can't stop to tell you now; but we shall most likely meet again to-day. I expect to be at the prison this afternoon. Shall I ask for you? Good! I won't forget!" With those farewell words he went out, and never so much as looked back at the prisoners before he closed the door behind him.

Trudaine returned to his sister, fearful lest his face should betray what had passed during the extraordinary interview between Lomaque and himself. But whatever change there might be in his expression, Rose did not seem to notice it. She was still strangely inattentive to all outward things. That spirit of resignation, which is the courage of women in all great emergencies, seemed now to be the one animating spirit that fed the flame of life within her.

When her brother sat down by her, she only took his hand gently, and said: "Let us stop together like this, Louis, till the time comes. I am not afraid of it, for I have nothing but you to make me love life, and you, too, are going to die. Do you remember the time when I used to grieve that I never had a child to be some comfort to me? I was thinking a moment ago how horrible it would have been now, if my wish had been granted. It is a blessing for me, in this great misery, that I am childless! Let us talk of old days, Louis, as long as we can—not of my husband, or my marriage—only of the old times, before I was a burden and a trouble to you."

CHAPTER XVIII.

THE day wore on. By ones, twos, and threes at a time, the condemned prisoners came from the tribunal, and collected in the waiting room. At two o'clock all was ready for the calling over of the death-list. It was read and verified by an officer of the court; and then the gaoler took his prisoners back to St. Lazare.

Evening came. The prisoners' meal had been served; the duplicate of the death-list had been read in public at the grate; the cell doors were all locked. From the day of their arrest, Rose and her brother, partly through the influence of a bribe, partly through Lomaque's intercession, had been confined together in one cell; and together they now awaited the dread event of the morrow.

The morning came, and the hot summer sunrise. What life was left in the terror-struck city awoke for the day faintly; and still the suspense of the long night remained unlightened. It was drawing near the hour when the tumbrils were to come for the victims doomed on the day before. Trudaine's ear could detect even the faintest sound in the echoing prison-region outside his cell. Soon, listening near the door, he heard voices disputing on the other side of it. Suddenly the bolts were drawn back, the key turned in the lock, and he found himself standing face to face with the hunchback and one of his subordinate attendants.

"Look!" muttered this last man, sulkily, "there they are, safe in their cell, just as I said; but I tell you again they are not down in the list. What do you mean by bullying me about not chalking their door last night, along with the rest? Catch me doing your work for you again, when you're too drunk to do it yourself!"

"Hold your tongue, and let me have another look at the list!" returned the hunchback, turning away from the cell door, and snatching a slip of paper from the other's hand. "The devil take me if I can make head or tail of it!" he exclaimed, scratching his head, after a careful examination of the list. "I could swear that I read over their names at the grate yesterday afternoon, with my own lips; and yet, look as long as I may, I certainly can't find them written down here. Give us a pinch, friend. Am I awake or dreaming? drunk or sober this morning?"

"Sober, I hope," said a quiet voice at his elbow. "I have just looked in to see how you are after yesterday."

"How I am, Citizen Lomaque? Petrified with astonishment. You yourself took charge of that man and woman for me, in the waiting room, yesterday morning; and as for myself, I could swear to having read their names at the grate yesterday afternoon. Yet this morning there are no such things as these said names to be found in the list. What do you think of that?"

"And what do you think," interrupted the aggrieved subordinate, "of his having the impudence to bully me for being careless in chalking the doors, when he was too drunk to do it himself?—too drunk to know his right hand from his left! If I wasn't the best natured man in the world, I should report him to the head gaoler."

"Quite right of you to excuse him, and quite wrong of him to bully you," said Lomaque, persuasively. "Take my advice," he continued confidentially to the hunchback, "and don't trust too implicitly to that slippery memory of yours, after our little drinking bout yesterday. You could not really have read their names at the grate, you know, or of course they would be down on the list. As for the waiting room at the tribunal, a word in your ear: chief-agents of police know strange secrets. The president of the court condemns and pardons in public; but there is somebody else, with the power of ten thousand presidents, who now and then condemns and pardons in private. You can guess who. I say no more, except that I recommend you to keep your head on your shoulders, by troubling it about nothing but the list there in your hand. Stick to that literally, and nobody can blame you. Make a fuss about mysteries that don't concern you, and——"

Lomaque stopped, and holding his hand edgewise, let it drop significantly over the hunchback's head. The action, and the hints which preceded it, seemed to bewilder the little man more than ever. He stared perplexedly at Lomaque; uttered a word or two of rough apology to his subordinate, and rolling his misshapen head portentously, walked away with the death-list crumpled up nervously in his hand.

"I should like to have a sight of them, and see if they really are the same man and woman whom I looked after yesterday morning in the waiting room," said Lomaque, putting his hand on the cell door, just as the deputy-jailer was about to close it again.

"Look in, by all means," said the man. "No doubt you will find that drunken booby as wrong in what he told you about them as he is about everything else."

Lomaque made use of the privilege granted to him immediately. He saw Trudaine sitting with his sister in the corner of the cell farthest from the door, evidently for the purpose of preventing her from overhearing the conversation outside. There was an unsettled look, however, in her eyes, a slowly heightening color in her cheeks, which showed her to be at least vaguely aware that something unusual had been taking place in the corridor.

Lomaque beckoned to Trudaine to leave her, and whispered to him: "The prescription has worked well. You are safe for to-day. Break the news to your sister, as gently as you can. Danville"—he stopped and listened till he satisfied himself, by the sound of the deputy-gaoler's footsteps, that the man was lounging toward the farther end of the corridor. "Danville," he resumed, "after having mixed with the people outside the grate yesterday, and having heard your names read, was arrested in the evening by secret order from Robespierre, and sent to the Temple. What charge will be laid to him, or when he will be brought to trial, it is impossible to say. I only know that he is arrested. Hush! don't talk now; my friend outside is coming back. Keep quiet—hope everything from the chances and changes of public affairs; and comfort yourself with the thought that you are both safe for to-day."

"And to-morrow?" whispered Trudaine.

"Don't think of to-morrow," returned Lomaque, turning away hurriedly to the door. "Let to-morrow take care of itself."

CHAPTER XIX.

ON a spring morning, in the year seventeen hundred and ninety-eight, the public conveyance then running between Chalons-sur-Marne and Paris set down one of its outside passengers at the first post-station beyond Meaux. The traveler, an old man, after looking about him hesitatingly for a moment or two, betook himself to a little inn opposite the post-house known by the sign of the Piebald Horse, and kept by the Widow Duval—a woman who enjoyed and deserved the reputation of being the fastest talker and the best maker of gibelotte in the whole locality.

He sat down alone in the inn-parlor and occupied the time, while his hostess had gone to fetch the half-bottle of wine that he ordered, in examining a dirty old card which he extricated from a mass of papers in his pocket book, and which bore written on it these lines:

"When the troubles are over, do not forget those who remember you with eternal gratitude. Stop at the first post-station beyond Meaux, on the high-road to Paris, and ask at the inn for Citizen Maurice, whenever you wish to see us or to hear of us again."

"Pray," inquired Lomaque, putting the card in his pocket when the Widow Duval brought in the wine, "can you inform me whether a person named Maurice lives anywhere in this neighborhood?"

"Can I inform you?" repeated the voluble widow. "Of course I can! Citizen Maurice, and the citoyenne, his amiable sister—who is not to be passed over because you don't mention her, my honest man!—live within ten minutes' walk of my house. A charming cottage, in a charming situation, inhabited by two charming people—so quiet, so retiring, such excellent pay. I supply them with everything—fowls, eggs, bread, butter, vegetables (not that they eat much of anything), wine (which they don't drink half enough of to do them good); in short, I victual the dear little hermitage, and love the two amiable recluses with all my heart. Ah! they have had their troubles, poor people, the sister especially, though they never talk about them. When they first came to live in our neighborhood——"

"I beg pardon, citoyenne, but if you would only be so kind as to direct me——"

"Which is three—no, four—no, three years and a half ago—in short, just after the time when that Satan of a man, Robespierre, had his head cut off (and serve him right!) I said to my husband (who was on his last legs then, poor man!) 'She'll die'—meaning the lady. She didn't, though. My fowls, eggs, bread, butter, vegetables and wine, carried her through—always in combination with the anxious care of Citizen Maurice. Yes, yes! let us be tenderly conscientious in giving credit where credit is due; never let us forget that the citizen Maurice contributed something to the cure of the interesting invalid, as well as the victuals and drink from the Piebald Horse. There she is now, the prettiest little woman in the prettiest little cottage——"

"Where? Will you be so obliging as to tell me where?"

Small Chip of a Great Block.

Gen. Sherman has a grandson and namesake resident in Boston. William Tecumseh Sherman Thorndike is a very young gentleman, still in kilts, but possessed of a remarkable plainness of speech and not at all inclined to lisp or use any babyish circumlocutions when he marches upon any difficulty. His mind has been the battlefield of a problem evidently of late. He has been assailed in his mind even in his nursery and he put the question to the touch the other day in prompt military fashion, determined to possess himself of an unprejudiced outside opinion, entirely uninfluenced by parental or nurse's notions. He appeared beside his mother, Gen. Sherman's daughter, in her drawing room while a visitor was present and exchanged courtesies of introduction politely with a manner most distinguished for infancy. Sherman sat regarding the visitor in silence for a few moments, then he leaned a little forward and, with the distinctness of a diplomat, enunciated his question:

"Should you be mad with me if you saw me suck my thumb?"—Boston Transcript.

Economy, Publicity and the Paramount Interest of Policyholders.

President Kingsley, of the New York Life Insurance Company, says, in an address to the policyholders, that his plan of administration involves these points:

"First: Strict economy; second, the widest, fairest and fullest publicity; third, the continuance of the New York Life as a world-wide institution; fourth, such an amount of new business under the law as we can secure while practicing intelligent economy, and enforcing the idea that the interest of the policy-holder is paramount."

Allowances Necessary.

"Why does marriage seem to dispel so much of the glamor of affection?" asked the sentimental young woman.

FEARFUL BURNING SORES.

Boy in Misery 12 Years—Eczema in Rough Scales, Itching and Inflamed—Cured by Cuticura.

"Cuticura has put a stop to twelve years of misery I passed with my son. As an infant I noticed on his body a red spot and treated same with different remedies for about five years, but when the spot began to get larger I put him under the care of doctors. Under their treatment the disease spread to four different parts of his body. During the day it would get rough and form like scales. At night it would be cracked, inflamed and badly swollen, with terrible burning and itching. One doctor told me that my son's eczema was incurable, and gave it up. I decided to give Cuticura a trial. When I had used the first box of Cuticura Ointment there was a great improvement, and by the time I had used the second set of Cuticura Remedies my child was cured. He is now twelve years old, and his skin is as fine and smooth as silk. Michael Steinman, 7 Sumner Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., April 16, 1905."

WHERE WAS THE SLEEK CAT?

Pound of Meat Was There, but the Kitten Was Missing.

A certain family living in one of the suburbs of New York owned a kitten of which they were very fond. When they went away for the summer it was decided after various consultations to leave the kitten with the butcher, on condition that he should treat it with the greatest kindness and give it about a pound of meat a week, besides its daily allotment of cream.

Some weeks after the family had closed the house for the summer the nominal head of the family visited the suburb to attend to some business matters and decided that he might as well drop in at the butcher's to see how the kitten was getting along.

He found the kitten curled up in the corner asleep and apparently at peace with the world, but, far from being sleek and well fed in appearance, it was so thin that he felt constrained to call the attention of the butcher to the fact.

"Do you mean to say you have fed that cat a pound of meat during the last week?" he asked.

"I certainly have," responded the butcher.

"Put him on the scales and see how much he weighs."

The butcher did as requested and gently deposited the kitten in the balance. The pointer indicated exactly one pound.

"Well, grunted the owner of the animal, "there's the pound of meat all right, but where's the cat?"

SOAKED IN COFFEE

Until Too Stiff to Bend Over.

"When I drank coffee I often had sick headaches, nervousness and biliousness much of the time, but when I went to visit a friend I got in the habit of drinking Postum.

"I gave up coffee entirely and the result has been that I have been entirely relieved of all my stomach and nervous trouble.

"My mother was just the same way. We all drink Postum now, and without coffee in the house for 2 years, we are all well.

"A neighbor of mine, a great coffee drinker, was troubled with pains in her side for years and was an invalid. She was not able to do her work and could not even mend clothes or do anything at all where she would have to bend forward. If she tried to do a little hard work she would get such pains that she would have to lie down for the rest of the day.

"At last I persuaded her to stop drinking coffee and try Postum Food Coffee and she did so and has used Postum ever since; the result has been that she can now do her work, can sit for a whole day and mend and can sew on the machine and she never feels the least bit of pain in her side, in fact, she has got well and it shows coffee was the cause of the whole trouble.

"I could also tell you about several other neighbors who have been cured by quitting coffee and using Postum in its place." "There's a Reason." Look in pkg. for the famous little book "The Road to Wellville."

LONG LIST OF BIRDS THAT EAT SCALE INSECTS

Valuable Service Rendered in Holding Pest in Check—By W. L. McAtee, Ass't. Biological Survey.

The importance of birds to the farmer in his warfare against insects is everywhere recognized; indeed, it may be said that successful agriculture would be well-nigh impossible without their aid. One important role, however, is filled by birds, in which the value of their services has not been appreciated, chiefly, no doubt, because the facts are not generally known. This is as destroyers of scale insects. Very little has been published on the subject, although at least six foreign species and about the same number of native ones have been reported as feeding upon scales. These facts have been either overlooked or little weight has been attached to them. Indeed, only recently currency has been given to a statement that birds never feed upon scales. Not only is this statement not true, but investigations by the biological survey prove conclusively that scales are eaten by many species of birds and that with some species they are a favorite food.

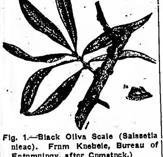

Fig. 1.—Black Olive Scale (Saissetia oleae). From Knebele, Bureau of Entomology, after Comstock.)

Among the most interesting published observations on this point are those of R. Newstead, Chester, England. He mentions four scale insects which were preyed upon by five species of birds, and it is to be noted that two of the scales and two of the birds are identical with species occurring in the United States. The house sparrow was found apparently feeding upon the hawthorn scale (Eulecanium genevense), which occurs only in Europe. Another scale insect, nevertheless, and an injurious one, the oyster-shell bark-louse (Mytilaspis pomorum), which was eaten by the birds Mr. Newstead studied, is a common pest in the United States. It was fed upon by the tree-creeper, a near relative of our brown creeper.

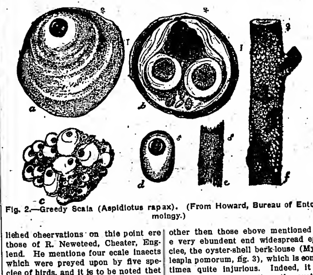

Fig. 2.—Greedy Scale (Aspidiotus rapax). (From Howard, Bureau of Entomology.)

Recent investigations show that a very much larger number of our North American birds prey upon scales than was expected, and some eat them to a considerable extent. Their influence upon the number of these pests, while doubtless less than that of the predaceous insects, is of far more importance than has yet been recognized. Among the scales they devour are some most notorious pests.

At least two native birds eat the plum scale, which is destructive to cherry and plum trees. One of them is the beautiful rose-breasted grosbeak (Zamelodia ludoviciana). A female of this species collected by the writer in Indiana had eaten 36 of these scales, composing 95 per cent. of the stomach contents. Two other grosbeaks from Illinois did still better. One consumed about 45 plum scales, which made up 95 per cent. of its food, while the other had eaten nothing but plum scales, of which its stomach contained more than 100. The cardinal or redbird also feeds upon the plum scale, one taken in Texas in April having consumed a number sufficient to form 84 per cent. of its stomach contents.

These two species of birds devour other scale insects also, some of which are closely related to the plum scale. The rose-breasted grosbeak has been found to eat the hickory scale (Eulecanium caryæ) and the tulip scale (Eulecanium tuliperferæ). The latter is very destructive to shade trees in some parts of the eastern United States. While both the rose-breasted and the cardinal grosbeak eat scales of the genus Eulecanium in large numbers, we have been unable to identify specifically any others, with the probable exception of the locust scale, Eulecanium robinarium (Douglas), from the stomach of a cardinal collected in Texas. Another grosbeak, the black-headed (Zamelodia melanocephala), at home in the western United States, preys upon scales of the same genus. It is known to select the frosted scale (Eulecanium pruinosum), which attacks fruit trees such as apricot, peach, prune and cherry, and is already important economically, with possibilities of becoming a serious pest if unchecked. It relishes also the apricot scale (Eulecanium ermeniacum), which is an enemy of apricot, prune, pear and other trees.

In the southeastern United States occurs an allied genus of scale insects, Toumeyella. The cardinal feeds upon at least one species of this group.

Distributed chiefly along the Pacific coast is a scale which is closely related to those of the above-mentioned genera and is preyed upon by many birds. This is the black olive scale (Saissetia oleæ, fig. 1).

Another scale insect which is eaten by several birds, but which differs from the last-mentioned species in that it confines itself to a single host plant, is the oak scale (Kermes). Oak scales are not conspicuously injurious, but this fact does not detract from the value of the birds which feed upon them, since we can be assured they do not neglect other kinds which are destructive. In fact, one of the oak-scale feeders, the rose-breasted grosbeak, is already known to feed upon other and harmful scales.

The following species of birds have been found to devour the oak scale:

Rose-breasted grosbeak, red-eyed vireo, white-eyed vireo, worm-eating warbler, magnolia warbler, blackpoll warbler, Canadian warbler.

The oaks, infested as they are by the comparatively innocuous Kermes, are fortunate in comparison to the maples, which are attacked by Pulvinaria. The cottony maple scale (Pulvinaria innumerabilis) is a special pest of the tree from which it derives its common name, but it is found upon scores of others.

Among scale insects eaten by birds other than those above mentioned is a very abundant and widespread species, the oyster-shell bark-louse (Mytilaspis pomorum, fig. 3), which is sometimes quite injurious. Indeed, it is said that in some sections the oyster-shell bark-louse is, with the exception of the San Jose scale, the most destructive scale insect.

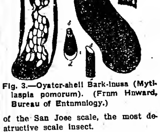

Fig. 3.—Oyster-shell Bark-louse (Mytilaspis pomorum). (From Howard, Bureau of Entomology.)

Following is a list of birds ascertained to feed upon scale insects none of which were specifically identified:

Hairy woodpecker (Dryobates villosus).
Northern downy woodpecker (Dryobates p. medianus).
Red-cockaded woodpecker (Dryobates borealis).
Arctic three-toed woodpecker (Picodes articus).
Yellow-bellied woodpecker (Sphyrapicus varius).
Red-headed woodpecker (Melanerpes erythrocephalus).
Blue jay (Cyanocitta cristata).
Orchard oriole (Icterus spurius).
Baltimore oriole (Icterus galbula).
Cedar waxwing (Ampelis cedrorum).
Townsend warbler (Dendroica townsendi).
Tufted titmouse (Baeolophus bicolor).
Bridled titmouse (Baeolophus wollweberi).
Carolina chickadee (Parus carolinensis).
Ruby-crowned kinglet (Regulus calendula).
Varied thrush (Ixoreus naevius).

All told, 57 species of birds have been found to eat scale insects. It is interesting to note that this number comprises representatives of 12 families, differing widely not only in structure but in habits. They are distributed as follows: Nine woodpeckers, 2 jays, 3 orioles, 8 sparrows, 1 waxwing; 6 vireos, 11 warblers, 2 wrens, 1 tree creeper, 2 nuthatches and 8 tits of the titmouse family, 1 kinglet and 1 gnatcatcher of the old world warbler family, and the varied thrush and the bluebird.

First Japanese Railway Train.

The throttle of the first Japanese railway train was pulled by an American, Duncan McDoneld, now a veteran in the employ of the Southern Pacific. That was thirty-five years ago, says the Railroad Man's Magazine, on the occasion of the completion of the narrow gauge line from Yokohama to Tokio, and McDonald had the honor of drawing the present mikado, then a young man of scarcely twenty.

New "Heat Veil."

The fire department of Cologne, Germany, has adopted as a protection to the faces of the men a newly invented "heat veil." The veil is made after the principle of a safety lamp, with double windows. It is composed of fibers of cane, which, as is known, possess the peculiar property of retaining water for a considerable length of time. The veil is dampened before being fastened to the fireman's ordinary brass helmet.

Children and Forestry

Massachusetts is trying to arouse her public school pupils to interest in forestry, and the state forester, F. W. Rass, has sent out to every school superintendent in the state a circular letter setting forth the desirability of further educating the children in caring for trees. He offers seedlings and seed of white pine, white ash, red spruce, beech, chestnut and acorn trees on payment of the actual expense of digging and express charges.

Brains are Built

FOOD

Grape-Nuts

"America has become a land of nervous emotionalists, largely owing to our sins against the dietetic health laws of nature.

"Only outdoor exercise in a cold climate would enable vigorous individuals of our species to digest the viands forced upon alimentary organs enfeebled by sedentary occupations," wrote Dr. Felix Oswald.

Brain workers must have different food than laborers, because brain work uses up parts of the brain and nerve centers, while physical labor uses up other parts of the body.

Grape-Nuts, a food for brain workers, prepared by scientific food makers, is a pure, natural food made from selected parts of field grains known to contain the natural phosphate of potash and other elements required by the system in rebuilding and repairing the brain and nerve centers. This food is skillfully cooked at the factory and is ready to be served instantly with cream. At all first-class grocers and made by the Postum Co., at Battle Creek, Mich. DISPOSAL OF DAIRY AND FARM SEWERAGE AND WATER-SUPPLY

A Practical Treatise by Prof. Oscar Erf, of the Kansas State Agricultural College.

The principal underlying the disposal of the sewage on the farm should be essentially similar to that of the cities. The proper method of disposing the sewage on the farm eliminates a great many dangers which constantly face the farmer. One of the most serious dangers is contamination of the water-supply. If the water-supply on the dairy farm is contaminated it will be impossible to produce sanitary milk, since utensils washed in impure water will directly affect the milk. The cesspool, so common on dairy farms, quite frequently secures a direct connection with the well, especially if located near it, and thus contaminates the water. Polluted water comes from improper sewage disposal, and is generally infected from household excrements, barn-yard drainage, etc. Its use leads to bowel disturbances, typhoid fever, and dysentery, affecting man and beast alike. The health of large communities of people who draw their food supply from the country is in a measure dependent upon the healthfulness of the farming community. In fact, there is scarcely a city child whose health is not in a degree dependent upon the sanitary condition of the barn and house of the dairyman. Milk has frequently been shown to be the means of disease distribution.

With these conditions before us it is absolutely necessary to have a good sewage-disposal plant on every farm. Health cannot be measured by cost; for a small cost should not stand in the way to any great extent in erecting a plant that is effective for this purpose.

The dairy department of the Kansas State Experiment station has for the past few years been experimenting on the different methods of sewage disposal, and it is now ready to advocate a system that is comparatively inexpensive, and is practical for every farm; in fact, in some cases it has proven to be a source of great profit when used for irrigating and fertilizing truck patches and farm crops. It has furthermore proven to be a labor-saving contrivance in the way of cleaning cow stables, providing the stables are properly constructed, as shown in Fig. 2 and 3.

The average cow voids about 20,000 pounds of manure per year, of which approximately 9,500 pounds are liquid and 10,500 pounds solid. If the gutters are properly constructed the liquid manure will take care of itself and will reduce the labor one-half of what it would be were the liquid absorbed by some absorbent like straw and then removed with the solid excrements.

Liquid manure contains a high per cent. of nitrogen, the most expensive part of a fertilizer. According to Snyder, liquid manure from cows fed a well-balanced ration contains about 80 per cent. water and 1.2 per cent. of nitrogen; solid manure contains 76 per cent. of water and .5 per cent. of nitrogen. This shows the comparative high value of liquid manure, which, on average farms of Kansas, is allowed to flow into streams and pollute the same.

According to Woll, the value of manure from a cow for one year, fed on a well-balanced ration, is estimated at $29.97. This is a source of income for the farmer which is seldom taken into consideration because his conditions are such that he is not able to take care of it. By means of a proper sewage-disposal system the value of this manure may be fully recovered, besides making conditions on the farm more sanitary.

The bottom should be inclined one-half inch to the foot. The spaces between the outlets may range from 12 to 15 feet. The depth of the gutter on the cow's side should be at least one foot. The advantage of this gutter over a narrow trough or half circle is as follows:

It has been the experience with dairy men having square, narrow gutters back of cows that the solid manure blocks the flow of the liquid manure. Hence it is necessary to remove by hand both the liquid and the solid manure. With the scheme as shown above the gutter is wide and the solid manure is voided on the side of the gutter on which the cow stands. The gutter being wide, the solid manure does not cover the bottom of the gutter, thus allowing the liquid manure to flow on the lowest end of the gutter, and from there to the sewage disposal system.

FIRST PLACE SURE

WASHINGTON WILL BE WORLD'S MOST BEAUTIFUL CAPITAL.

Transformation Now Going On is Rapidly Bringing This About—Splendid Buildings of Marble and White Granite.

A letter published recently in the Boston Transcript contains the following interesting comment on the national capital:

The Emperor Augustus, who found Rome brick and left it marble, enjoyed peculiar facilities for working the transformation. The Augustus age was not one in which it was safe for real estate operators to build cheaply after the emperor had hinted that his policy was to have a splendid capital. We have no Augustus to compel the recasting of the architectural aspect of our national capital. That is left to the operation of economic forces, which when once manifested are imperial in their tendencies, and to-day Washington is being enriched with many buildings, big, impressive structures, because the construction of such emphatically pays. The conversion from brick to marble on the Augustan scale has not come and may not be coming, but in the new great buildings of the capital whether private or public, the materials dominates. The local conditions are peculiarly favorable to the employment of this material.

In spite of the constant agitation of the Washingtonians for a better anti-smoke law, there is very little smoke to trouble the atmosphere. On a sunny day but a feather of smoke appears here and there against a sky of almost Italian blue. The marble suffers little from the cause which would make a marble building in London either a monument of extravagance or of those defeated.

Scenically marble is a success in Washington, marble or its substitute, white granite. Its whiteness is emphasized by the greenery of boscage of the parks and by the blueness of the sky. In the new development of the capital two influences have been at work, that of the government, which builds big because the country pays the bills, and that of business, which builds big because the requirements of trade and commerce so demand. The great public buildings include the two immense and classic-fronted annexes for the senate and house, which flank the capitol on either side, and which when completed will, as seen from the treasury corner, be as two broad massive bars of white in the perspective. The new Agricultural Department building, and the new National museum are of a dignity which will make the Smithsonian's eccentric architecture even more a grief to the judicious than it is now. The new municipal building, or, as we should call it, the city hall, is gradually developing its substance. It, too, will be classic in outline. It stands not far from the treasury corner, around which the most marked business development of the city is progressing. Near the capitol the white facade of the union station draws near completion, and part of the building, which will contain thirty tracks when finished, will shortly be occupied by the Baltimore & Ohio. The present wooden countrified depot of the Baltimore & Ohio, whose tower always appears to wear an expression of surprise at finding itself in a city, will be swept away in the improvement of the approaches to the grand new terminus which will serve all railroads entering Washington, the Southern lines obtaining access to it by a tunnel under Capitol hill.

Mention of the "new highway bridge" is a reminder that one of the most familiar landmarks, or perhaps watermarks, of Washington is disappearing as the workmen level the superstructure of the old historic Long bridge and grub up the piling. The railroads now cross the Potomac on a modern steel bridge, built high above the tide. For the trolleys, for teams and foot passengers there is the highway bridge paralleling that used exclusively by the railroads. It has a most excellent highway surface, approached by broad and winding avenues on the Washington side. The two bridges are not things of beauty. They are severely utilitarian, which is a pity when we consider what a noble part they might have been in the vista of the broad Potomac. Standing on the highway bridge at sunset one obtains a view that is almost pathetic in its charms, the city on one side of the river, and on the other the Virginia hills on which the white front of the Arlington is a note of attention. Washington is not yet the most beautiful capital in the world, though Washingtonians say it is, but it is moving rapidly toward the attainment of their proud characterization.

Women In Postal Service.

One of the signs of growth in our postal system appears in the employment of women. Up to 1862 women had never been employed in the service. Then they were admitted to the dead-letter office—eight of them. Now of the 1,195 employes in the department in Washington 309 are women, and there are in the whole country 27,600 women employed, generally in the stamp delivery or money order offices, and receiving salaries running from $400 to $1,700 a year.

ALL WOMEN SUFFER from the same physical disturbances, and the nature of their duties, in many cases, quickly drift them into the horrors of all kinds of female complaints, organic troubles, ulceration, falling and displacements, or perhaps irregularity or suppression causing backache, nervousness, irritability, and sleeplessness.

Women everywhere should remember that the medicine that holds the record for the largest number of actual cures of female ills is made from simple native roots and herbs. For more than thirty years it has been helping women to be strong, regulating the functions perfectly and overcoming pain. It has also proved itself invaluable in preparing for child birth and the Change of Life.

Mrs. A. M. Hagermann, of Bay Shore, L. I., writes:—Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—"I suffered from a displacement, excessive and painful functions so that I had to lie down or sit still most of the time. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me a well woman so that I am able to attend to my duties. I wish every suffering woman would try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and see what relief it will give them."

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation to Women

Women suffering from any form of female illness are invited to write Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. for advice. She is the Mrs. Pinkham who has been advising sick women free of charge for more than twenty years, and before that she assisted her mother-in-law Lydia E. Pinkham in advising. Therefore she is especially well qualified to guide sick women back to health.

A GOOD MEETING

Red Lake County Sunday School Convention Holds Two Days' Session.

Red Lake county has just closed a most successful county Sunday school convention.

While the numbers were not large the spirit of inquiry and of work dominated the convention in a way seldom found in a county convention.

The "best ever" was the unanimous consent of all in attendance.

A delegation of thirteen came down from Thief River Falls and St. Hilaire.

Nearly every delegate was present at all the sessions and paid closest attention to all that was said. The state workers, Mr. A. M. Locker and Miss Grace Longfellow, were present at all but the last session. Mr. Locker had charge of graded and supplemental work and Miss Longfellow had charge of the cradle roll and primary work. They are well informed as to their work and gave our Sunday school workers many valuable suggestions. Red Lake county has learned to look from and to the coming of Mr. Locker and Miss Longfellow with much pleasure as they know they are to be greatly helped as to usefulness by their coming.

The following construction work was accomplished. The county was divided into three sections with the three points, Thief River Falls, St. Hilaire and Red Lake Falls as centers. A vice-president was elected from each point who appoints a secretary, these to co-operate with the officers of the association in helping to organize Sunday Schools in isolated portions of the county. The officers of Supt. of Home department Supt. of Teacher Training classes, Supt. of Elementary department were created and plans laid for definite work along these lines next year.

The following officers were elected:

President, Rev. Barackman.

Vice-presidents, Mrs. Blancard, Mrs. Austin, Mr. Simons.

Secy.-treasurer, E. W. Chamberlain.

Supt. teacher training, Rev. Chas. Flesher.

Supt. home department, Mrs. Poston.

Supt. elementary department, Mrs. E. W. Chamberlain.

Resolutions were adopted strongly endorsing the work of Mr. Locker and Miss Longfellow and the work of the department newly created, also the hospitality of the Red Lake Falls people.

It is hoped that we will be able to do much more and better work on account of the coming together of our Sunday school workers.

Grand Rapids Independent: Arthur Zaiser and Harry Garceau, of Red Lake Falls, arrived in the city Sunday morning and spent part of the day here looking over the town. In the afternoon, accompanied by Hugo Zaiser who met them here, they left for the country north of here on a combined land-looking and pleasure trip.

Large amount of money to loan on farms.—L. C. Simons.

BIG DIFFERENCE.

Between the Selling Price of Land and Assessed Valuation.

E. O. Wilson was in the city to spend Sunday with his brother, Ben M. Wilson, says the Thief River News.

Mr. Wilson is in the employ of the state tax commission and is traveling over the state gathering information for the commission he represents. He left Monday morning for Warren and there will make a copy of the assessed valuation of farm lands of Marshall county for years from 1902 to 1906. He will also take a copy of all warranty deeds filed during this time in order that the difference between the selling price and the assessed valuation may be obtained. It is quite likely that the valuation of farm lands in various portions of the state are to be increased quite a good deal, as there is a big difference between the sale price and the assessed valuation. It is also true that in many instances the consideration named in the deed is much larger than the actual amount paid.

Killed By Lightning.

St. Hilaire Spectator: During the electrical storm Wednesday forenoon lightning struck and killed Hjalmer Carlson, the ten-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Carlson, living about four miles west of town. The boy had just driven into the barnyard with a load of rye when the lightning struck the load upon which he was riding, instantly killing the boy, knocking down both of the horses, and killing one of them, and the shock was being felt by the father, mother and little sister who were at work in the house and barn. Two neighbor boys in the field felt the shock but were not stunned. The load of rye was burned and it is thought the other horse will never be of service, should he survive the shock. The blow to the family was a severe one and in the loss the entire community joins with The Spectator in extending their heartfelt sympathy. The remains were prepared for burial by the Holmes morgue and the funeral was held Sunday from the house at 1 p. m. and from the United Norwegian Lutheran church at 2 o'clock, Rev. Wangensteen holding services. Interment in the cemetery east of town.

About Chewing.

Gladstone's forty chews have been added to from time to time by different medical authorities who advise that the chewing process last until the food is reduced to a liquid. It is safe to say that ninety-nine persons out of a hundred, swallow their food before it reaches the liquid state. For a real liquid food golden grain belt beer is all that could be desired. Its food value is recognized and it is a valuable aid in digestion. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thomnson, Crookston,

Ten Reasons Why.

Here are ten good reasons why we should all patronize and trade with our home business people. Read the article over carefully and give each reason careful consideration, and see if there is not some truth in it.

Because, you examine your purchase and are assured of satisfaction before investing your money.

Because, your home merchant is always willing to make right any error or any defective article purchased from him.

Because, when you are sick or any reason makes it necessary for you to ask for credit, you can go to the local merchant. Could you ask it of a mail order house?

Because, if a merchant is willing to extend you credit you should give him the benefit of your cash trade.

Because, your home merchant pays local taxes and exerts every effort to build and better your market, thus increasing both the value of the city and country property.

Because, the mail order merchant does not lighten your taxes or in any way uphold the value of your property.

Because, the mail order merchants do nothing for the benefit of our markets or real estate values.

Because if your town is good enough to live in, it is good enough to spend money in—Gov. Folk of Missouri.

Because the best citizens in your community patronize home industry. Why not be one of the best citizens?

Because, if you give your home merchant an opportunity to compete by bringing him your order in the quantities you buy out of town, he will demonstrate that, quality considered, he will save you money.

Synopsis of Game Laws.

We publish herewith a synopsis of the state game laws as revised by the general laws of 1905. We mention only the rules governing the taking of such game as is common to this section.

From September first to November first is the open season for turtle dove, snipe, prairie chicken, pinnated, white-breasted or sharp-tailed grouse, woodcock, upland plover and golden plover.

Quail, partridge, ruffed grouse, or pheasants may be killed or had in possession between the first day of October and the first day of December.

Wild ducks, geese or brants of any variety may be taken between the first day of September and the first day of December.

The law claims that any game which has been lawfully taken may be held in possession for five days after the expiration of the open season of such game.

No person shall in any one day take or kill in any one day more than fifteen birds or have in his possession at any time more than forty-five turtle dove, prairie chicken, quail, pheasant, partridge, woodcock or plover, or any or all of the same combined, or fifty snipes, wild duck, goose or brant or any or all of the same combined.

A decidedly novel feature of the Minnesota State Fair this year will be the flight of a real sure enough ship of the air, twice a day. This is not a hot air balloon from which a man descends to earth banging to a parachute, but a real steerable vessel of the air, which will rise over the heads of the people like a bird and return to its starting place. The sailor is of long experience in his line and the exhibition will be entirely new. The air ship will make flights three times a day, the weather permitting. This year's fair opens on Sept. 2, when Dan Patch will be the attraction. It closes on Saturday, Sept. 7, with a great automobile show and race meet.

GRANTS IMMUNITY TO ALTON ROAD

WILL NOT BE PROSECUTED FOR ITS PART IN GRANTING REBATES.

STANDARD OIL ALONE GUILTY

IMMUNITY GRANTED CHICAGO & ALTON FOR INFORMATION GIVEN.

Chicago, Aug. 15. — Immunity has been granted to the Chicago & Alton for its part in connection with the illegal rebates for which the Standard Oil Company of Indiana recently was fined $29,240,000 by Judge Landis at Chicago. This fact has become known coincident with the return to Washington of Attorney General Bonaparte, who is about to start proceedings in the direction of criminal prosecution of anti-trust law offenders, if a victim worthy of conviction can be found.

It appears that Former Attorney General Moody, under whose direction the Standard Oil cases recently reaching a climax at Chicago were instituted, used the Chicago & Alton to gain the information upon which indictments originally were returned. Special Counsel Morrison, formerly United States district attorney for the district of Chicago, it is understood, promised the Alton immunity from prosecution in return for the information furnished.

MOORS REPULSED; LOSS HEAVY.

Another Assault Made on Casablanca by 4,000 Tribesmen.

Tangier, Aug. 15. — A report from Casablanca says that that city was suddenly attacked by four thousand Moorish tribesmen Sunday night, who were driven back with terrible loss by the French after several hours of fighting.

The tribesmen displayed dauntless courage, charging repeatedly almost to the French guns, but a hail of shrapnel finally drove them back with heavy losses. The fire of the warships in the roadstead was terribly effective on the masses of native horsemen. The French losses were inconsiderable.

Will Not Grab Morocco.

Paris, Aug. 14.—Minister of Foreign Affairs Pichon has given an interview to the Matin, in which he says:

"The government will send no more troops into Morocco. On no account do we intend to embark upon a work of conquest."

The Matin publishes a dispatch from its correspondent at Casablanca saying the fighting between the natives and the men of Gen. Drude's command lasted all day Saturday, but quieted down Saturday night and Sunday morning. A renewal of the attack, however, is feared, as another kaid, with numerous reinforcements, has arrived. The warships continue to shell the Arab positions.

Virtually Destroyed.

Washington, Aug. 14.—The state department has received the following cablegram relative to the disturbance in Morocco from American Minister Gummere, dated at Tangier yesterday:

"I have been informed by the consular agent at Casablanca, under date of the 10th inst., that the town has been virtually destroyed and that naturalized American citizens lost everything. He also says that the foreigners have left Alcazar for Larache for security. The situation is considered very threatening. There is a French cruiser at Tangier, but in case of attack the Moorish soldiers at that point would join the tribesmen. Many people are leaving for Spain."

OIL STOCK LOWEST IN YEARS.

Wall Street Struck by Another Decline —Rail Paper Goes Down, Too.

New York, Aug. 15.—For a time yesterday there was a recession in the wave of liquidation which for several days had been depressing the price of securities, but before midday the pressure had been renewed and quotations in some instances were a point below Monday's close.

Prominent among those were Reading, Canadian Pacific and Great Northern preferred, while, exceptionally, St. Louis Southwestern preferred declined 6 3-4.

In the early trading Standard Oil sold down to 423, a decline of 77 in a week. This is the low record price in many years.

Fall in Tub Breaks Ribs.

Virginia Town Burned Out.

Norfolk, Va., Aug. 15.—A large portion, if not the entire business section of Princess Anne, on the eastern shore of Maryland, was burned out early yesterday. The fire was not of an incendiary origin, but was accidental, it is declared.

Tokio, Aug. 15—Luke E. Wright, the retiring American ambassador to Japan, started yesterday morning on his return to the United States. His departure is generally regretted.

BOTH REFUSE TO ARBITRATE

COMPANIES AND STRIKERS SAY THEY HAVE NOTHING TO ARBITRATE.

Chicago, Aug. 14.—The operators in the office in this city and on the South and Western circuits of the Associated Press leased wires stopped work last night at 7:30 o'clock. The strike was made against the wishes and advice of Grand Secretary Russell of the telegraphers' union, who tried to keep them at work for another twenty-four hours, or until satisfactory arrangements could be made for a conference between M. E. Stone, the general manager of the Associated Press, and a committee of the operators.

Asked for Conference.

Following the delivery of Mr. Stone's reply to the operators, in which he said he had no authority to grant the demands and that the matter would have to be decided by the board of directors, Secretary Russell sent a message to the operators of the Associated Press, suggesting that Mr. Stone be asked to set a definite date on which he could meet the operators, the date to be announced by 7:30 Tuesday night. To a message asking him to name a date of a meeting of the directors, Mr. Stone replied that a meeting of the directors would be held on Sept. 18, and he would be glad to lay the matter before them at that time.

Operators Walk Out.

This arrangement was unsatisfactory to many of the operators, particularly those on the Southern circuit, and they sent a message to Chicago announcing that they had quit. This was quickly followed by a walkout of the men in Chicago and New York.

One Associated Press wire was kept going in St. Paul part of the night, receiving dispatches by way of Denver.

Strike Spreads Rapidly.

Chicago, Aug. 13.—The strike of the telegraphers spread rapidly yesterday, the men walking out in many cities in the East and West. The chief strike of the day was in New York, where the operators of both the Western Union and Postal companies left their keys. Other strikes during the day were as follows:

Western Union—Montgomery, Ala.; Savannah, Ga.; Augusta, Ga.; Des Moines, Iowa; Chattanooga, Tenn.; Cleveland, Buffalo, Baltimore, Toledo, Columbia, S. C.; Pittsburg, Washington, D. C.

Postal—Columbus, O.; Des Moines, Iowa; Denver, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Baltimore, Columbia, S. C.; Washington, D. C.; Minneapolis.

Some Brokers Sign Scale.

During the day two of the largest commission houses in this city signed the scale presented by the operators and also issued a call for a meeting of representatives of other commission houses to discuss means of warding off the strike.

Small Show for Peace.

Arbitration advocates, in the shape of Secretary Easley of the National Civic Federation and Labor Commissioner Neill, arrived in this city, but their mission was made difficult before they arrived by the statements of Superintendents Cook of the Western Union and Capen of the Postal company, to the effect that they would arbitrate nothing.

Operators Say Fight Is Won.

Secretary Russell said the operators would not agree to arbitrate for the reason that the fight was already won and it would be foolish for the men to throw away the advantage they have gained. Mr. Russell issued a bulletin to the operators yesterday, in which he declared that the fight was won and urged all members of the union to stand firmly for a few days longer. He reported the strike in all sections of the country as progressing favorably for the men.

Vote on General Strike.

The local unions of the operators throughout the United States and Canada were voting on the question of ordering a general strike if their demands were not granted by the companies within the next twelve hours, but Secretary Russell said late yesterday that the vote was practically unanimous for a strike if the demands of the operators were not granted.

Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, arrived in the city yesterday to take an active part in the conduct of the strike. He was in several conferences during the day with the leaders of the union, but declared at night that the situation had not materially changed since his arrival.

Operators Pull "Plugs."

Both companies were troubled during the day by the pulling of "plugs" by operators at various points along the line. Officials of both companies declared that arrests would be made for this offense whenever possible.

Prisoners Escape.

Hastings, Minn., Aug. 14.—Two prisoners, Martin Servic of South St. Paul, held to the grand jury for larceny, and Arthur Bean, a St. Paul bum, escaped from the county jail here, making their exit by some outside party tampering with the door locks.

Husband and Wife Murdered.

Noblesville, Ind., Aug. 14.—George W. Hudson and wife were found dead at their home near here. It is presumed they were murdered by unknown persons, whose object was robbery. Both had been shot.

Gas Explosion Hurts Woman.

Yankton, S. D., Aug. 14.—An acetylene gas explosion at the home of Lyman Thomas blew a stove to pieces and knocked Mrs. Thomas senseless. The house fortunately did not catch fire.

HARRIMAN TO BE FORCED TO TELL

GOVERNMENT FILES PETITION TO COMPEL MAGNATE TO ANSWER QUESTIONS.

KELLOGG TO START THINGS

NOTIFIES BONAPARTE THAT HE WILL GO AFTER STANDARD SEPT. 3.

New York, Aug. 14.—United States District Attorney Stimson yesterday filed in the United States circuit court in this city a petition that E. H. Harriman and Otto H. Kuhn, the latter of the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., be summoned into court to show cause why they should not answer certain questions relating to the control of the Chicago & Alton railroad. These questions were asked during the interstate commerce commission's investigation of the Chicago & Alton several months ago. Mr. Stimson acted for Attorney General Bonaparte in filing the petition.

The questions to which the government demands answers from Mr. Harriman and Mr. Kuhn relate to the purchase of the controlling interest in the Chicago & Alton and the Illinois Central by the Union Pacific.

Bonaparte Is Quizzed.

Washington, Aug. 13. — Attorney General Bonaparte returned yesterday from his vacation at Lenox, Mass., and took up at once many important matters pending in the department of justice. He was unwilling to discuss the reports that he had returned to begin criminal prosecution in the Harriman and Standard Oil cases, but speaking generally he said the department stands ready to bring criminal action when there seems a good chance to convict. He expressed no opinion concerning the possibility of conviction in case action is brought in either of the cases mentioned.

Elkins Law Strong Enough.

Discussing the existing statutes, he said the Elkins law has been proven strong enough to put an end to rebating, but that some more active enforcement might be beneficial. While he had no criticism to offer of the Elkins law, he thought that the Hepburn act passed by the last congress may strengthen it materially.

Mr. Bonaparte had a telegram from F. B. Kellogg of St. Paul, who has been acting for the government as special attorney in both the Harriman and the Standard Oil cases, stating that the taking of testimony in the St. Louis case against the Standard Oil company, which is for the dissolution of the concern, will begin in New York on Sept. 3.

KAID M'LEAN SET AT LIBERTY.

Was Turned Over by Raisuli to Tribesmen, Who Have Set Him Free.

Tangier, Aug. 14.—Kaid General Sir Harry MacLean is free, according to apparently authentic reports received here yesterday afternoon. The reports state further that the kaid was turned over by the bandit Raisuli to the Elkmes tribesmen, and that the latter gave him his liberty. It is not known when he will reach this city.

Kaid MacLean was captured by the bandit July 3.

France Is Wary.

Paris, Aug. 13.—While it is officially declared that the French government will not extend the scope of its action in Morocco beyond what was communicated to the powers, namely, to confine itself to the restoration of order and the organization of the international police, it may be significant of a possible change in the attitude of France that she has declined to agree to the invitation of Spain to send a new joint note to the powers, reaffirming the solidarity of the views and actions of the two governments, which matter is now the subject of diplomat-

Would Conquer Country.

The section of the press which is convinced that France must assume the task of putting an end to the existing anarchy in Morocco believes it to be the duty of the government not to try to deceive either itself or the world. They believe that to establish permanent order in Morocco that country must be conquered as Algeria was, and that in order to accomplish this the hands of France must be freed from the restrictions of the Algeciras convention. Therefore, the papers argue, the powers should induce Germany to give her consent to the conquest of Morocco and that then France must prepare for a long campaign. Of course, the natural sequel to the conquest, the absorption of Morocco, is not concealed.

IS MURDER AND SUICIDE.

Ex-Mayor Kills Father-in-law and Himself.

Ottumwa, Iowa, Aug. 14. — Frank Dungate, former mayor and a prominent merchant here, last night shot and killed his father-in-law, George Godfrey, and then committed suicide by shooting himself in the head. Just what motive prompted Dungate to commit the deed is unknown. He had been sick for the last week and may have committed the act in a fit of temporary insanity.

KILLS WIFE; SLAIN IN TURN

DAUGHTER KILLS FATHER AFTER LATTER HAD KILLED HER MOTHER.

New York, Aug. 17. — George Wasser, fifty-seven years old, murdered his wife and was in turn slain by his daughter, Mrs. Adaline Langlotz, at the home of the women in Harlem yesterday.

Wasser fired upon his wife and then exchanged shots with his daughter. The latter was not wounded. Mrs. Wasser soon succumbed to her injuries and her husband died a little later.

The daughter was arrested. She asserted that the father had persistently practiced cruelties upon his family.

Mrs. Langlotz when arraigned before Magistrate House for shooting her father said:

"My father was shooting at my mother, so I sent Annie, my younger sister, to fetch a revolver. My father was still firing at my mother when I was given the revolver, and it was not until I saw the burning clothes on my mother's breast and heard her cries that I raised my revolver and fired at the man. I fired four shots at him as he sneaked through the rooms. I don't care what happens to him or me."

No one had told her that her mother was dead. The magistrate said he would not send her to prison and told her he would aid her all he could.

SHAFTING SEIZES GIRL.

Factory Employe Is Badly Hurt and Narrowly Escapes Death.

Waterloo, Iowa, Aug. 17.—Miss May Willy had a narrow escape from death in the glove factory in this city. TWO MEN KILLED FOR THEIR MONEY

VICTIMS OF MYSTERIOUS DOUBLE MURDER FOUND IN MINNEAPOLIS.

DETECTIVE FORCE IS BAFFLED

ONE BODY MANGLED BY TRAIN TO WIPE OUT EVIDENCE OF CRIME.

Minneapolis, Aug. 13. — Unknown murderers killed two men in Minneapolis early Sunday morning, evidently for their money.

The crime was not discovered until late yesterday afternoon, although the body of one victim was found on the railroad tracks in the morning, where it had been placed by the murderers.

The lifeless body of Andrew Bjerglund was first found, terribly mutilated under the wheels of a freight car on the side track of the Minneapolis & Western railway at the foot of Twelfth avenue south. Trainmen discovered the body, and as it was supposed that the man had been the victim of an accident no particular investigation was attempted.

Find Body in Weeds.

About 5:30 in the afternoon a colored man walking through a patch of weeds at the foot of Twelfth avenue, near First street, discovered the body of the second man, who has not yet been identified. An examination disclosed the fact that the man had died from a bullet wound in the head.

The discovery of the second man, who beyond a doubt had been murdered, caused a further investigation into the death of the first victim. Bjerklund's head was found to be crushed as though he had been struck with some heavy and blunt instrument. The wound would in itself have caused death or unconsciousness, and it is believed his body was then placed on the tracks in an effort to hide the crime and the real cause of death.

Detectives Get Busy.

Detectives were at once put on the case, and the entire neighborhood was searched for clues.

Whether the two murders were connected in any way is not known. It is believed by the police that Bjerklund was killed about midnight, while the unidentified man evidently met death about 1 o'clock in the morning, as residents in the vicinity say they heard a shot about that time, but they could see nothing, and thought little of the matter.

The police have no clue to the murderers.

SEVEN DULUTH MEN DROWNED.

Small Boat Occupied by Workmen Is Run Down in Harbor by Tug.

Duluth, Minn., Aug. 13.—Seven men in the employ of the Northern Pacific road as freight handlers were run down by a tug in the Duluth harbor while returning to their homes in a rowboat and drowned.

Shortly after 6 o'clock the men who were drowned, together with four others, quit work and boarded a small boat, as was their custom, to take the short cut by water to their homes, a mile distant. They had proceeded but a boat's length when a tug, towing a sand scow, bore down upon them and swamped the craft. The suction was so great that the men were all drawn underneath the scow. Four of them, being good swimmers, managed to reach the surface, but the other seven were seen no more.

BIG TWINE PLANT BURNED

MILLION-DOLLAR PLANT AT ST. PAUL THREATENED WITH TOTAL DESTRUCTION.

St. Paul, Aug. 15. — The $1,000,000 International Flax Twine plant at Hazel Park was threatened with total destruction by a fire that started in the south warehouse was a mass of ruins, morning. The western end of the south warehouse was a mass of ruins, entailing a loss of $30,000, the remainder of the warehouse emitting huge clouds of smoke, threatened to blaze up any moment.

Fanned by the heavy south wind the flames swept above the entire plant and only prompt work upon the part of the firemen prevented a general conflagration. The real check to the fire was a two-foot brick firewall built about midway into the south warehouse. The flames were unable to leap this wall, and, driven into a corner, were partially subdued after a fight of six hours.

Owing to the inflammable stuff, raw flax, stored in the warehouse, it was almost impossible to make any headway against the flames, which, fanned by the rising wind, swept over the building, jumping from section to section of the warehouse. Several times it seemed as though the fire wall would give way or that the flame would leap it and jump to the north side, where a clean sweep awaited. But the heroic work of the firemen, coupled with the strength of the wall, held the blaze back and at 3 o'clock there was a good chance of saving the rest of the plant.

There is some talk of the company purchasing the old Scott mill water power on Cannon river, about four miles north of this city, which would be developed for furnishing power. At first the promoters intended to run west of Faribault, touching the lakes, and then running a spur track to Faribault, but they now intend to run directly through the city.

HARVEST HANDS MUCH NEEDED

NORTH DAKOTA FARMERS HAVE BIG CROP AND WANT MEN TO HANDLE IT.

St. Paul, Aug. 15.—Men are wanted and wanted badly in the North Dakota harvest fields. So great is the demand that the civic and commercial bodies throughout the state have taken up the cry and are making every effort to secure men. Conditions are very favorable for an average crop throughout the Northwest, and the pay offered by the farmers is very good, with steady work up to the middle of November assured.

A. J. Wells of Grafton, N. D., who was in the city yesterday, said that from now on the farmers will be able to use more help than they can possibly get and they are worrying a good deal about the annual shortage of men.

"The grain crop in North Dakota this year is an excellent one," said Mr. Wells, "and thousands of men will be needed to harvest it. Our commissioner of agriculture estimates that at least 7,500 men will be needed and every effort is being made to secure them. The commercial clubs throughout the state have taken the matter up and are sending advertising matter through the country explaining the situation.

"Probably better wages will be paid this year than ever before."

State News of Interest

FINE BUTTER, JUDGES SAY.

State Contest Just Closed Was the Closest and Best of Series.

The state butter scoring contest has been completed in St. Paul. Over 240 tubs of butter were tested by the judges, and out of the entire lot five were selected as the best. James T. Pomeroy of Lake Benton, Minn., was given a marking of 97, putting him in first place, and his butter card was marked, "Very good butter. Best this year. Good boy! Come again." Erhard Lundblad of North Branch scored second, with 96 1-2 per cent and was marked, "Very good commercial butter. Very clean flavor." Three men were tied for third place—Edwin Hed, 96; C. F. Wendt, 96, and E. A. Gudwangen, 96.

The judges are highly pleased with the result of this contest.

The contests are carried on with a view of assisting the Minnesota buttermakers by criticising their products, and seem to have been wonderfully successful. Nearly the same contestants were entered in the two previous contests as appeared in this one, and a marked improvement in the quality of the butter was shown. The average scoring was higher and the butter was better made, more care being taken as to cleanliness, etc. The moisture tests also showed an improvement. The law allows from one to under 16 per cent of water in butter. Sixteen per cent or over must be condemned, and while the last contest found any number of entries that ran over the legal allowance, one even going as high as 21 per cent, this contest only developed two out of the total of 240. The next contest will be held during the state fair, and over 500 entries are expected from all parts of the country, to have been terminated by the arrest of an unknown Spaniard, who is believed to have been the perpetrator of the crimes.

Recently when a burglary at Evansville and another at Hanover came to light, Marshal Broughton of Evansville organized a posse and determined to run down the thief. The men scoured the country all afternoon and late in the day the marshal and a portion of his posse decided to invade a cornfield.

In the center of the field they came upon a man engaged in counting a pile of coin and currency. In another pile was a choice collection of jewelry. The man instantly was covered by a half dozen revolvers and quickly was made prisoner. An inventory taken of the loot shows that nearly every article is listed as stolen. Where the Spaniard came from is a mystery, as no one has been able to communicate with him.

SEE THE FAIR IN WHEEL CHAIRS.

Provision for Those to Whom Walking Is a Burden.

Excluding the bracing sea breeze and the marine view, visitors to the state fair will be able to experience all the ecstatic enjoyment of being wheeled comfortably about in rubber cushioned chairs that is the privilege of the opulent habitues of Atlantic City, according to C. N. Cosgrove, secretary of the Minnesota State Fair association. He has announced that uniformed attendants will be in waiting with easy, cushion-tired chairs to convey all those who prefer riding to walking about the state fair grounds.

To afford greater convenience to those who are not physically able to make a tour of the grounds on foot, and to accommodate others who are physically inclined to follow life along the lines of least resistance, the management of the fair has determined to adopt a feature prominent in all large expositions, in that fifteen to thirty wheel chairs will be secured by the opening day of the state fair and will be placed in service. In view of the fact that there are over six miles of cement sidewalk about the grounds, which touch all the important points of interest, it was decided that chair service would be a matter of great convenience to many patrons of the exhibition of state products.

The idea is new in connection with state fairs and will be given a preliminary test before steps are taken to make this feature a permanent institution. It is thought, however, that the scheme will be liberally patronized, and should this be the case arrangements will be made for a large consignment of the vehicles to be used in succeeding years.

Another scheme that will be inaugurated if arrangements can be made will be a system of sight-seeing automobiles, which will skirt the fair grounds, touching the principal points of attraction.

Press Will Be There.

Newspaper headquarters building at the Minnesota state fair this year will be in charge of Granville S. Pease of the Anoka Union, one of the best known newspaper men in the state. Press headquarters at the fair are in the Minnesota St. Louis building—the building which was removed to the fair grounds the following year. All newspaper men are made welcome, and Mr. Pease will give them the glad hand.

LAND ROW IS ENDED.

State Auditor Delivers Deed to 20,904.37 Acres of Railway Grant.

The old controversy over the title to land included in a grant to the old Hastings & Dakota railroad has been closed by the delivery by the state auditor of deeds to 20,904.37 acres of land to the trustees of the road. The title to this land has been involved in litigation twelve years, and the termination of the controversy was made possible by an act of the legislature passed last winter.

The land grant was made by an act of congress, and the list of lands included were certified to the state for the benefit of the company. Later complications arose, however, and in 1895 the Minnesota legislature declared the land grant forfeited. The grant having originated in an act of congress, however, the federal authorities refused to pay any attention to the legislative act, and the company took the matter into the courts, with the result that its title to the land was confirmed.

Ever since the passage of the act of 1895, however, the state officials have refused to issue deeds for the land, in view of the fact that the state legislature had ordered the grant forfeited. As the title of the railroad has been upheld by the courts, the legislature last winter passed an act repealing the act of 1895. This cleared the way for a settlement of the question, and Gov. Johnson has now signed the deeds which will give the settlers on the lands in question a clear title to their lands. While they have heretofore been in undisturbed possession of the land, the failure of the state to issue its deed left a cloud on the title.

The deeds just issued cover lands located in eight of the counties of the state, as follows: Swift, 11,119.38; Stevens, 5,191.18; Big Stone, 2,061.44; Chippewa, 1,998.80; Kandiyohi, 240; Yellow Medicine, 160; Lac qui Parle, 93.67; McLeod, 40.1.

OLD RELICS ARE ADDED.

State Historical Society Gets Interesting Document.

The state historical society has just received from Rev. George H. Mueller of Albert Lea, a son-in-law of Former Judge R. R. Nelson of the federal court, a number of interesting old documents, including three certificates of the election of the presidential electors in Minnesota in the years 1864, 1872 and 1884. The gift also included two old parchments, one dated in 1817 being a patent of land, and the other, dated 1836, being a patent issued for an improvement on the cotton gin.

The oldest of the presidential electoral certificates was dated Dec. 6, 1864, and was signed by Gov. Stephen Miller. At that time Minnesota only had two congressional districts and but four electors were elected, these casting their votes for Abraham Lincoln.

The society has also received a portrait of J. W. Bass, one of the early postmasters of St. Paul, who died about twenty years ago. He succeeded Henry Jackson, who was the postmaster from 1842 to 1848. Mr. Bass served as postmaster from 1849 to 1853, his term in that office being coincident with the term of Alexander Ramsey as governor of the territory. Mr. Bass was a hotel keeper and was the proprietor of the St. Paul house in the early days. The portrait was presented to the society by his widow.

EVERY man is the architect of his own fortune, but some of us need schooling in architecture.

RED LAKE county will have a splendid exhibit at the state fair in the Red Lake Falls band, but it wouldn't hurt if some of our butter, cheese fruit and cereals were also on exhibition. It pays to advertise.

RUMOR has it that the Standard Oil will get even with the newspapers by getting control of the paper trust and raising the price of paper to prohibitive figure. We doubt the accuracy of the story, because just now the Standard Oil has troubles of its own.

THE Fairmont Sentinel is right in saying: "Judge Lochren is mentally and physically incapacitated for work, but he hangs on his job apparently with the only object of serving corporato interests. His case affords an unanswerable argument against an appointive judiciary and life terms in office."

A. N. DARE retired from the office of state expert printer, August 1, and thus announces his return to the editorial chair of the Elk River Star-News:

> "After a little over four years absence saving the country and incidentally drawing a meager stipend from the state, the editor has returned to his first love and will be in harness now to the end of the chapter."

THE Big Fork Compass says: "Now that the pure food law has jilted the old egg, testing the egg we buy may become a pleasant pastime. A fresh egg will sink when placed in water and rest sedately on its side. If three weeks old, it will incline slightly with the big end up; if three months old it will stand on the small end; if older, it will jump out of the water and cackle or crow according to its instinct. Try the test."

THE Wadena Pioneer-Journal asserts a truism that many Red Lake county farmers can verify in saying: "If farmers could get together and do their ditching privately instead of proceeding under the county and judicinl ditch law, they could save themselves a lot of money. The trouble is that there are always some individuals who stand out and block the work unless compelled to do their share under the regular ditching laws."

IT costs forty cents to send a ten-word telegram from Red Lake Falls to St. Paul. In Australia, where the government owns and operates the telegraph lines ten words can be sent the same distance for 16 cents. And the Australian government makes money out of the business. Probably a few more strikes will bring the people to a realization of the fact that the telegraph business could be handled more efficiently and cheaply by the government.

LETTERS have been sent by citizens of New Ulm to the attorney general's office complaining that the Sunday law is violated there. Attorney General Young is expected to return at any time and will take up the complaints. If he acts, it will be in a proceeding to oust the New Ulm mayor from his office and collect a fine from him in addition. The violation of the Sunday law at New Ulm is open. Mayor Silverson announced that unless the citizens of the town wanted the saloons to close on Sunday he would permit them to remain open.

DURING 1906 the fire insurance companies doing business in Minnesota collected $5,346,033.77 in premiums, and paid $3,146,323.89 in losses. The underwriters claim even in view of this enormous difference they lost money, as the cost of doing business is more than forty per cent. If this is true there should be a reorganization of the fire insurance business. There is no good reason why the people should be compelled to pay such an enormons price for fire protection.

Rev. Knox Speaks in Ithaca.

The following notice from the Ithaca, New York, Daily News, of August 12, will be of interest to the Red Lake Falls friends of Rev. H. W. Knox;

The pulpit of the First Presbyterian church was filled by the Rev. Herbert Knox, of Green Bay, Wisconsin, who is well known in this community, where he was a student at the University and a member of the Presbyterian church.

He is a brother of the Misses Helen C. and Sara M. Knox of Spring street. Mr. Knox was graduated from Cornell in the class of 1894 and later studied at Auburn Theological seminary.

His sermon yesterday was a clear and impressive exposition of one of Paul's sentences, in which the great apostle says that he is pressing forward to attain the full service for which he was "apprehended." Mr. Knox interpreted the word apprehended as meaning "apprenticed", and wove about this meaning an excellent discourse.

The speaker is a strong preacher with good presence and excellent delivery.

T. A. Harris, of Crookston, is at present employed in moving the elevator of the Red Lake Falls Milling company at Thief River Falls from its old location on the Great Northern tracks to a point near the depot at that place. Some trouble has arisen over the moving and the city council has attempted to stop the milling company from moving the building. However, matters were satisfactorily adjusted and the building is being hurried rapidly to the new site.

A Painful Possibility.

When the teacher called the class for geography she noticed that Eben Wilkins, her dullest pupil, wore a particularly cheerful smile.

"You look as if you knew your lesson today," she said encouragingly.

"Yes'm, I do," he answered briskly. "The answer to the first question is 'north,' and the next is 'Alaska,' and the next is 'United States,' and the next is"—

"But that is not the way to learn your lesson, Eben," and the teacher struggled for a properly severe expression. "You must skip about. That is what I shall do in asking the questions."

Eben looked as if the joy of living had departed once for all.

"But supposing I didn't skip about just the way you do," he said plaintively, "then I'd be all mixed up."—Youth's Companion.

Wasted Irish Land.

The landlords own most of the land in Ireland and rent it out to the farmers, who assert that it is poor, and consequently they have a hard time to produce enough to support their families and pay the rent. Most of the land seems to be used for pasturage, and but little of it is under cultivation, as are the lands of Italy, Germany and France. Besides, there is a great waste caused by the building of wide turf fences. There are more fences to a farm in Ireland than in any other country.—Travel Magazine.

Reports come from one or two farmers who have threshed small quantities of barley, to the effect that the yield is much greater than at first anticipated. Several loads were hauled to a Black River machine and the usual number of sacks were taken along, but when the threshing was done, it was found that in no case was the quantity of sacks adequate to accommodate the amount of grain threshed. The color and quantity of the grain is excellent and everything there is good cheer among the farmers at the excellent outlook for the returus from the grain crops.

Sheriff Nelson is convinced that corporations sometimes look out for the welfare of the people, and his conviction comes from an instance that happened to him in the cities last week. In leaving a street car hurriedly at Minneapolis one day last week, he forgot his new cravanette coat and didn't discover his loss until too late to trace the car. He reported the fact to the street car company but didn't expect to see the coat again. His pleasure was great yesterday when he received the garment intact by express showing that the street car company of the Twin cities attempt to protect their customers as well as possible.

How a Veteran Was Saved the Amputation of a Limb.

B. Frank Doremus, veteran, of Roosevelt Ave., Indianapolis, Ind., says: "I had been showing symptoms of kidney trouble from the time I was mustered out of the army, but in all my life I never suffered as in 1897. Headaches, dizziness and sleeplessness, first, and then dropsy. I was weak and helpless, having run down from 180 to 125 pounds. I was having terrible pain in the kidneys, and the secretions passed almost involuntarily. My left leg swelled until it was 34 inches around, and the doctor tapped it night and morning until I could no longer stand it, and then he advised amputation. I refused, and began using Doan's Kidney Pills. The swelling subsided gradually, the urine become natural and all my pains and aches disappeared. I have been well now for nine years since using Doan's Kidney Pills."

WORK TREATMENT IN DISEASE.

Especially Successful With the Mentally Affected.

Some interesting experiments conducted at the State institution at Mauer Oehling have completely demonstrated the great value of work as a means of healing in various forms of chronic illness, especially in mental and nervous disorders, alcoholism and epilepsy.

Under the supervision of Dr. Starlinger, the chief of the institution, no less than 54 per cent of the patients are engaged in some kind of occupation. The majority are employed in farm, dairy and garden work, while others turn their attention to mechanical trades, including the production of a newspaper, which is printed and also largely written by the inmates.

It has been found that the mentally affected and those suffering from alcoholism make the most willing and efficient workers. Work has a quieting influence and renders the patients much more satisfied.

The favorable effect on their physical condition is shown from the fact that the number of deaths from tuberculosis have steadily decreased since the introduction of the work treatment, although the number of patients has constantly increased.

One other good effect of the work treatment is that the general public is found to lose much of its dread of asylums when it sees the patients engaged in some useful occupation.

SISTER ROSE.

A STORY OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

BY WILKIE COLLINS.

CHAPTER XIX.—(Continued.)

"And in excellent health, except that she is subject now and then to nervous attacks, having evidently, as I believe, been struck with some dreadful fright—most likely during that accursed time of the Terror, for they came from Paris—you don't drink, honest man! Why don't you drink? Very, very pretty in a pale way; figure perhaps too thin—let me pour it out for you—but an angel of gentleness, and attached in such a touching way to the citizen Maurice—"

"Citizen hostess! will you, or will you not, tell me where they live?"

"You droll little man! why did you not ask me that before, if you wanted to know? Finish your wine and come to the door. There's your change, and thank you for your custom, though it isn't much. Come to the door, I say, and don't interrupt me! You're an old man—can you see forty yards before you?—Yes, you can! Don't be peevish; that never did anybody any good yet. Now look back along the road where I am pointing. You see a large heap of stones? On the other side of the heap of stones there is a little path—you can't see that, but you can remember what I tell you? Good. You go down the path till you get to a stream; down the stream till you get to a bridge; down the other bank of the stream (after crossing the bridge) till you get to an old water-mill—a jewel of a water-mill! famous for miles around; artists from the four quarters of the globe are always coming to sketch it! Ah! what, you are getting peevish again? You won't wait? Impatient old man, what a life your wife must lead, if you have got one! Remember the bridge! Ah! your poor wife and children. I pity them, your daughters especially. Pst! pst! Remember the bridge—peevish old man, remember the bridge!"

Walking as fast as he could out of hearing of the Widow Duval's tongue, Lomaque took the path by the heap of stones which led out to the high road, crossed the stream, and arrived at the old water-mill. Close by it stood a cottage—a rough, simple building, with a strip of garden in front. Lomaque's observant eyes marked the graceful arrangement of the flower beds, and the delicate whiteness of the curtains that hung behind the badly-glazed narrow windows. "This must be the place," he said to himself, as he knocked at the door with his stick. "I can see the traces of her hand before I cross the threshold."

The door opened. "Pray, does the citizen Maurice"—Lomaque began, not seeing clearly, for the first moment, in the dark little passage.

Before he could say any more his hand was grasped, his carpet bag was taken from him, and a well-known voice cried: "Welcome! a thousand times welcome at last! Citizen Maurice is not at home; but Louis Trudaine takes his place, and is overjoyed to see once more the best and dearest of his friends!"

"I hardly know you again! How you are altered for the better!" exclaimed Lomaque, as they entered the parlor of the cottage.

"Remember that you see me after a long freedom from anxiety. Since I have lived here, I have gone to rest at night, and have not been afraid of the morning," replied Trudaine. He went out into the passage while he spoke, and called at the foot of the one flight of stairs which the cottage possessed, "Rose! Rose! come down! The friend whom you most wished to see has arrived at last!"

She answered the summons immediately. The frank friendly warmth of her greeting; her resolute determination, after the first inquiries were over, to help the guest to take off his upper coat with her own hands, so confused and delighted Lomaque, that he hardly knew which way to turn, or what to say.

"This is even more trying, in a pleasant way, to a lonely old fellow like me"—he was about to add, "than the unexpected civility of the hot cup of coffee years ago;" but remembering what recollections even that trifling circumstance might recall, he checked himself.

"More trying than what?" asked Rose, leading him to a chair.

"Ah! I forget. I am in a dotage already!" he answered, confusedly. "I have not got used just yet to the pleasure of seeing your kind face again."

CHAPTER XX.

IT WAS indeed a pleasure to look at that face now, after Lomaque's last experience of it. Three years of repose, though they had not restored to Rose those youthful attractions which she had lost forever in the days of the Terror, had not passed without leaving kindly outward traces of their healing progress. Though the girlish roundness had not returned to her cheeks, or the girlish delicacy of color to her complexion, her eyes had recovered much of their old softness, and her expression all of its old winning charm. What was left of latent sadness in her face, and of significant quietness in her manner, remained gently and harmlessly—remained rather to show what had been once than what was now.

When they were all seated, there was, however, something like a momentary return to the suspense and anxiety of past days in their faces, as Trudaine, looking earnestly at Lomaque, asked—"Do you bring any news from Paris?"

"None," he replied; "but excellent news, instead, from Rouen. I have heard, accidentally, through the employer whom I have been serving since we parted, that your old house by the river side is to let again."

Rose started from her chair. "Oh! Louis, if we could only live there once more! My flower-garden?" she continued, turning to Lomaque.

"Cultivated throughout," he answered, "by the late proprietor."

—"And the laboratory?" added her brother.

"Left standing," said Lomaque. "Here is a letter with all the particulars. You may depend upon them, for the writer is the person charged with the letting of the house."

Trudaine looked over the letter eagerly.

"The price is not beyond our means," he said. "After our three years' economy here we can afford to give something for a great pleasure."

"Oh! what a day of happiness it will be when we go home again!" cried Rose. "Pray, write to your friend at once," she added, addressing Lomaque, "and say we take the house, before any one else is beforehand with us!"

He nodded; and folding up the letter mechanically in the old official form, made a note on it in the old official manner. Trudaine observed the action, and felt its association with past times of trouble and terror. His face grew grave again, as he said to Lomaque, "And is this good news really all the news of importance you have to tell us?"

Lomaque hesitated and fidgeted in his chair. "What other news I have will well bear keeping," he replied. "There are many questions I should like to ask first, about your sister and yourself. Do you mind allowing me to refer for a moment to the time when we last met?"

He addressed this inquiry to Rose, who answered in the negative; but her voice seemed to alter, even in saying the one word "No." She turned her head away when she spoke; and Lomaque noticed that her hands trembled as she took up some work lying on a table near, and hurriedly occupied herself with it.

"We speak as little about that time as possible," said Trudaine looking significantly towards his sister; "but we have some questions to ask you in our turn; so the allusion, for this once, is inevitable. Your sudden disappearance at the very crisis of that terrible time of danger has not yet been fully explained to us. The one short note which you left behind you helped us to guess at what had happened rather than to understand it."

"I can easily explain it now," answered Lomaque. "The sudden overthrow of the Reign of Terror which was salvation to you, was destruction to me. The new republican reign was a reign of mercy, except for the tail of Robespierre, as the phrase ran then. Every man who had been so wicked or so unfortunate as to be involved, even in the meanest capacity, with the machinery of the government of Terror, was threatened, and justly, with the fate of Robespierre. I among others fell under this menace of death. I deserved to die, and should have resigned myself to the guillotine, but for you. From the course taken by public events, I knew you would be saved; and although your safety was the work of circumstances, still I had a hand in rendering it possible at the outset; and a yearning came over me to behold you both free again with my own eyes—a selfish yearning to see, in you, a living, breathing, real result of the one good impulse of my heart which I could look back on with satisfaction. The desire gave me a new interest in life. I resolved to escape death, if it were possible. For ten days I lay hidden in Paris. After that—thanks to certain scraps of useful knowledge which my experience in the office of secret police had given me—I succeeded in getting clear of Paris and in making my way safely to Switzerland. The rest of my story is so short, and so soon told, that one relation I knew of in the world to apply to, was a cousin of mine (whom I had never seen before), established as a silk-mercer at Berne. I threw myself on this man's mercy. He discovered that I was likely, with my business habits, to be of some use to him, and he took me into his house. I worked for what he pleased to give me; traveled about for him in Switzerland; deserved his confidence, and won it. Till within the last few months I remained with him, and only left my employment to enter, by my master's own desire, the house of his brother, established also as a silk-mercer, at Chalons-sur-Marne. In the counting house of this merchant I am corresponding clerk; and am only able to come and see you now, by offering to undertake a special business mission for my employer at Paris. It is drudgery, at my time of life, after all I have gone through—but my hard work is innocent work. I am not obliged to cringe for every crown-piece I put in my pocket—not bound to denounce, deceive, and dog to death other men, before I can earn my bread, and scrape together money enough to bury me. I am ending a bad, base life harmlessly at last. It is a poor thing to do, but it is something done—and even that contents a man of my age. In short, I am happier than I used to be—or at least less ashamed when I look people like you in the face."

"Hush! hush!" interrupted Rose, laying her hand on his arm. "I cannot allow you to talk of yourself in that way, even in jest."

"I was speaking in earnest," answered Lomaque, quietly; "but I won't weary you with any more words about myself. My story is told."

"All?" asked Trudaine. He looked searchingly, almost suspiciously, at Lomaque, as he put the question. "All?" he repeated. "Yours is a short story, my good friend! Perhaps you have forgotten some of it?"

Again Lomaque fidgeted and hesitated.

"Is it not a little hard on an old man to be always asking questions of him, and never answering one of his inquiries in return?" he said to Rose, very gaily as to manner, but rather uneasily as to look.

"He will not speak out till we two are alone," thought Trudaine. "It is best to risk nothing, and to humor him."

"Come, come," he said aloud, "no grumbling. I admit that it is your turn to hear our story now; and I will do my best to gratify you. But, before I begin," he added, turning to his sister, "let me suggest, Rose, that if you have any household matters to settle upstairs——"

"I know what you mean," she interrupted, hurriedly taking up the work which during the last few minutes she had allowed to drop into her lap; "but I am stronger than you think; I can face the worst of our recollections composedly. Go on, Louis; pray go on—I am quite fit to stop and hear you."

"You know what we suffered in the first days of our suspense, after the success of your stratagem," said Trudaine, turning to Lomaque. "I think it was on the evening after we had seen you for the last time at St. Lazare, that strange confused rumors of an impending convulsion in Paris first penetrated within our prison walls. During the next few days the faces of our gaolers were enough to show us that those rumors were true, and that the Reign of Terror was actually threatened with overthrow at the hands of the Moderate Party. We had hardly time to hope everything from this blessed change, before the tremendous news of Robespierre's attempted suicide, then of his condemnation and execution, reached us. The confusion produced in the prison was beyond all description. The accused who had been tried and the accused who had not been tried got mingled together. From the day of Robespierre's arrest, no orders came to the authorities, no death lists reached the prison. The gaolers, terrified by rumors that the lowest accomplices of the tyrant would be held responsible, and be condemned with him, made no attempt to maintain order. Some of them—that humpbacked man among the rest—deserted their duties altogether. The disorganization was so complete, that when the commissioners from the new government came to St. Lazare, some of us were actually half starving from want of the mere necessaries of life. To inquire separately into our cases was found to be impossible. Sometimes the necessary papers were lost; sometimes what documents remained were incomprehensible to the new commissioners. They were obliged, at last, to make short work of it by calling us up before them in dozens. Tried or not tried, we had all been arrested by the tyrant, had all been accused of conspiracy against him, and were all ready to hail the new government as the salvation of France. In nine cases out of ten, our best claim to be discharged was derived from these circumstances. We were treated by Tallien and the men of the ninth Thermidor, because we had been suspected by Robespierre, Couthon, and St. Just. Arrested informally, we were now liberated informally. When it came to my sister's turn and mine, we were not under examination five minutes. No such thing as a searching question was asked of us; I believe we might even have given our own names with perfect impunity. But I had previously instructed Rose that we were to assume our mother's name—Maurice. As the citizen and citoyenne Maurice, accordingly, we passed out of prison—under the same name we have lived ever since in hiding here. Our past repose has depended, our future happiness will depend, on our escape from death being kept the profoundest secret among us three. For one all-sufficient reason, which you can easily guess at, the brother and sister Maurice must still know nothing of Louis Trudaine and Rose Danville, except that they were two among the hundreds of victims guillotined during the Reign of Terror."

Origin of Windfall.

The origin of the expression "windfall," which is used when one wishes to refer to a streak of good luck, dates back to the time of William the Conqueror. At that time it was a criminal offense to cut timber in the British forests without royal consent. All that could be gathered for fuel or other purposes was such limbs as the wind should happen to break and cast to the ground. On this account the peasants hailed a windstorm as a blessing, because it was apt to cast enough of "windfalls" for winter firewood. From this old-time forestry custom comes the modern application of the expression.

Cockroaches are never willingly slain by Chinamen. They consider them sacred insects and think it portends ill-luck to step on them. As they never make any effort to exterminate them the Chinese quarters are usually overrun with these pests.

THE NATIONAL ZOO

INSTITUTION OF IMPORTANCE AT THE CAPITAL.

Here Are Collected Fine Specimens of Animals Gathered from All Parts of the World—Place Like Natural Park.

Not long ago Ras Makonnan, governor of Harrer province, Abyssinia, after the manner of old-world potentates, presented to the United States a rare species of zebra. With the zebra came the lion and later a pair of ostriches was shipped from the same source. From Sir Reginald Wingate, the successor to Lord Kitchener as governor-general of Soudan, there has come another lion, and from the governors of states in Brazil, such as the governor of Para and the governor of Amazonas, the United States has accepted a number of South American animals. Within a fortnight, Mr. Nelson of the department of agriculture shipped to Washington two Mexican tiger cats and a number of rare forest birds, the gift of Carlos H. Jones of Campeche, Mexico.

The international courtesies exchanged, it is not generally known what becomes of these animals. The future of many other beasts and birds which in one way or another, through consuls or department agents, come into the possession of the United States government is not usually followed up. To whose charge are they given, and how do they pass the rest of their lives?

Twenty years ago they would have been turned over to some private menagerie or housed in crude wooden structures back of the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, where zoologists and biologists could study them at close range. Perhaps the daily sight of these temporary structures had something to do with the purpose the late Dr. S. O. Langley, secretary of the institution, took steps to carry out at that time to found on the outskirts of Washington a national zoological park.

It was not an easy task to convince legislators why they should pay to "have the Nebraska elk and Florida alligators cooped up." In 1890, however, a bill was finally passed through congress to establish a zoological park for the "advancement of science and the instruction and recreation of the people," and also as a haven of refuge where those "native animals that were threatened with extinction might live and perpetuate their species in peace."

The bill allotted $200,000 for the purchase of land and building. The few animals caged back of the Smithsonian institution were turned over to new quarters, and the administration of the national zoo became a branch of the institution's work.

Now 167 acres of hilly, woody land two miles from the center of Washington is the final home of nearly every beast that comes into the possession of the United States government. There is no law making it the only depository for such gifts, but as a matter of fact, very few are sent elsewhere.

An idea of Secretary Langley, when he founded the zoo, was to furnish for the animals surroundings as nearly like their natural homes as possible. The idea was a new one at the time. The few menageries in the country had not the facilities to execute any such plan. He opposed any too evident artificiality in the architecture of the grounds. He wished the national zoo to be a natural park in every mode practicable. The large acreage helped him in this course, for our zoological gardens are two and a half times as large as the celebrated Thiergarten at Berlin and four times as large as the zoo in London.

Since the national zoo was founded over 2,000 animals have been housed here and during the last few years the collection has averaged about 1,200 birds and beasts at a time.

Apples and Peanuts for Lunch.

Former Senator Francis M. Cockrell of Missouri, now a member of the interstate commerce commission, has regained his health sufficiently to partake of his usual noonday lunch—two apples and a sack of peanuts, which during his thirty years' official residence in Washington, most of the time as United States senator, were his only diet for the noonday meal.

Senator Cockrell says he believes there is more nutriment in a sack of peanuts than in a pound of beefsteak and that they are easier to get. Last winter when he was stricken with illness his physician ordered him to drop apples and peanuts for a while. It was a hard task.

Recently when he was advised that he could resume his favorite bill of fare he was happier than a boy with his first pair of red top boots.

White Paint for the White House.

The annual cleaning of the White House is under way. A large force of painters is now at work on the structure, and pretty much all of the four months the President is absent will be utilized in renovating and cleaning the exterior of the old building.

The walls of the White House were not painted last year. The experiment of washing with a highly recommended preparation was made. This was unsuccessful, as the wash seems to have cracked the paint and left the walls in bad shape generally wherever it was applied. After these walls have been properly treated a liberal treatment of good old fashioned paint will be used, and the White House again will appear in its glistening dress of pure white.—Washington Post.

Painting for Profit

No one will question the superior appearance of well-painted property. The question that the property-owner asks is: "Is the appearance worth the cost?"

Poor paint is for temporary appearance only.

Paint made from Pure Linseed Oil and Pure White Lead is for lasting appearance and for protection. It saves repairs and replacements costing many times the paint investment.

The Dutch Boy trade mark is found only on kegs containing Pure White Lead made by the Old Dutch Process.

Servants and Eggs.

Mrs. Phelps Stokes, in an address in New York, said of the servant question:

"Are there not too many mistresses who treat their servants as the lady did in buying eggs?

"This lady entered a shop and said:

"'Have you eggs?'

"'Yes, madam,' said the shopman.

"'Well,' said the lady, 'I want a dozen absolutely fresh eggs for myself, and——' She touched the arm of her maid, who stood beside her—— 'and a half-dozen not quite so fresh for my maid here.'"

USED BY THE DOCTORS.

Ninety Per Cent of the Drugs Prescribed Are Patent Medicines.

Despite the opposition of physicians, especially of those whose experience has been neither far reaching nor profitable, to "patent" medicines, ninety per cent of all drugs that physicians use are put up and compounded by manufacturing concerns,—are, in fact, "patent" medicines just as truly as if they were advertised in the newspapers.

The average doctor knows little or nothing of pharmacy and is, therefore, glad to depend on the very medicines, which in public he condemns, just as he is obliged in many cases to depend on the diagnosis of the patient himself, even while publicly decrying what he calls "self-diagnosis." How rapid has been the growth of the professional use of "patent" or "proprietary" medicines is shown in an article written for the Journal of the American Medical Association for September 29, 1906, by A. Jacobi, M. D., LL. D. He relates that 50,000 prescriptions, compounded in several drug stores were carefully examined. From 1850 to 1870 no prescription was found for "patent" or "proprietary" medicines. In 1874 but one prescription in 1,500 called for ready-to-use remedies. Between 1875 and 1880 the number calling for "patent" or "proprietary" medicines equalled two per cent of the total. This increased to 5 per cent in the period between 1880 and 1890. In 1895 it was 12 per cent, in 1898 it was 15 per cent, and in 1902-1903 was from 20 to 25 per cent.

Dr. Jacobi says that in a large store he was assured that 70 per cent of the prescriptions were for "patent" or "proprietary" medicines, and this probably is approximately the correct proportion at the present time. From this it would seem that if the "patent" and "proprietary" medicines are good enough for physicians to prescribe in seven cases out of ten they are good enough for family use in cases of necessity and where the symptoms are well known and as easily understood by the people as by the doctors.

SPOILS OF AUSTRIAN COURT.

How They Are Divided Among the Attendants Upon Royalty.

Court etiquette in Austria is more stringent than in other European courts.

The attendants come in for large perquisites, as comestible articles are never allowed to appear twice on the royal tables. It must be a good thing to be one of these attendants, as to one man falls all the uncorked bottles, to another the wine left in the glasses, and the game, fish, and sweets are equally divided in the same way.

Each morning a market is held in the basement of the palace, where the Viennese come to purchase the remains of the banquet.

This custom is a revival of one that obtained great favor in the Middle Ages. Then the great lords of the land were not above accepting the remains of a feast and the lord chancellor was entitled to the ends of one large candle and forty small ones each day.

He in his turn made capital of this perquisite and undoubtedly his exchequer was greatly increased by it at the end of the year.

WAGE WAR ON THE WHITE-PINE TREE WEEVIL

Its Attacks Prevent Development of Normal Straight Trunk—By A. D. Hopkins, in Charge Forest Insect Investigations.

The white-pine weevil is a somewhat elongate, brownish snout beetle, 4 to 5 mm. in length, having the thorax and elytra marked with irregular spots of brown and white scales (fig. 1, a). The winter is passed in the adult stage, evidently in the ground. The beetles come out of their winter quarters and fly early in May, and after feeding for a few days on the bark of the living white-pine terminal shoots deposit their eggs in punctures in the bark of the shoot of the previous year's growth, placing one or two eggs in a pit or cavity in the inner bark made by the beak of the mother beetle. In from six to ten days the eggs begin to hatch into small white grubs (larvae), which at first are usually found in large numbers feeding upon the inner bark and cambium (see fig. 2). They usually work downward and sometimes extend their work into the bark of the two-year-old stem and base of the branches. By the time the larvae have completed their development (fig. 1, b) they are greatly reduced in numbers by natural enemies and other causes. The survivors burrow into the wood or pith of the terminal and excavate individual transformation cells, which they line and cover with excelsior-like borings. In these cells they transform to pupae (see fig, 1, c) and adults, and during July and August of the same year, when the adults are fully matured, they bore their way out and seek suitable places in which to pass the winter.

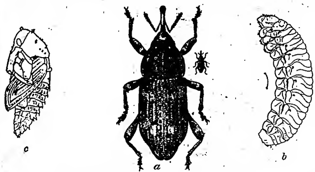

Fig. 1.—White-Pine Weevil (Pissodes Strobi).

a, Adult, smaller figure natural size; b, larvae, line at left natural length; c, pupa, small figure of adult showing natural size. (Original.)

The white pine is the tree normally attacked, but the weevil is occasionally found in the terminals or topmost branches of the native and cultivated spruces, the jack pine, and very rarely in the pitch pine or other eastern pines. The attack is confined to the small, to large sapling and pole stages in the development of the tree.

Our records indicate that this weevil follows the natural range of the white pine from southwestern North Carolina into New Brunswick and Canada and westward into Wisconsin.

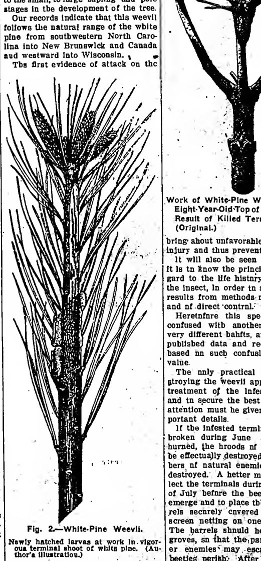

Fig. 2.—White-Pine Weevil.

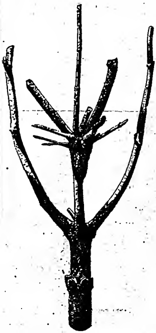
Newly hatched larvas at work in vigorous terminal shoot of white pine. (Author's illustration.)

The first evidence of attack on the living terminals is the exudation of fresh, clear and shining drops of resin. Upon closer examination fresh pinhole-like punctures are found in the bark, and at the same time the inconspicuous beetles may be found on the terminal; but upon the approach of the observer the beetles will often let go their foothold and fall to the ground, where they will feign death. In a few days after the first attack the injured terminals will have the resin more or less abundant and conspicuous over the greater part of the surface. The first evidence that the terminals are infested with larvae is the stunted, unhealthy appearance of the young growth at the tip, which will gradually die, the needles turning yellowish and later brownish.

The time of development of the broods to adults will be indicated by the first appearance of dead tips.

The damage and loss, as affecting the commercial tree, consists not only in the death of the terminal shoots, but in subsequent abnormal development of the trees so injured. The dying of the leading shoot throws the next year's growth into the upper lateral shoots, which results in a forked and many-branched top. Each branch produces a vigorous terminal, and all compete for leadership in forming the crown. In succeeding years the more vigorous terminals of the topmost branches are attacked and killed causing more branches, and thus effectually preventing the development of the normal straight trunk and symmetrical crown necessary to a tree of commercial value.



Work of White-Pine Weevil, Showing Eight-Year-Old Top of Large Sapling. Result of Killed Terminal Shoot in (Original.)

In the successful control of this pest, as in the control of forest insects in general, much depends on special features in the general methods of forest management, which will bring about unfavorable conditions for injury and thus prevent loss.

It will also be seen how important it is to know the principal facts in regard to the life history and habits of the insect, in order to secure the best results from methods of management and of direct control.

Heretofore this species has been confused with another species with very different habits, and some of the published data and recommendations based on such confusions are of no value.

The only practical method of destroying the weevil appears to be the treatment of the infested terminals, and to secure the best results special attention must be given to certain important details.

If the infested terminals are cut or broken during June and July and burned, the broods of the weevil will be effectually destroyed, but vast numbers of natural enemies will also be destroyed. A better method is to collect the terminals during the first half of July before the beetles begin to emerge and to place them in tight barrels securely covered with wire fly-screen netting on one or both ends. The barrels should be left in the groves, so that the parasites and other enemies may escape, while the beetles perish. After the 1st of October the weevils will all be dead, and the netting may then be removed, although the barrels with their contents should be left until the following June to allow the escape of the later developing and larger parasites. The barrel should not be placed in a position to collect rain. It is necessary, however, if this method be adopted, that it be repeated two or three years in succession in the same locality, in order to catch the successive broods from the old parent beetles that live over from preceding years.

Handsome Catalog.

Professor Sathre, of the Crookston Business College, may well feel proud of the excellent catalog which he has put out this year and which he is sending to prospective students all over the Northwest. It is probably the finest specimen of catalog work ever turned out in the Northwest.

The book is not only an advertisement for the school but is a splendid advertisement for Crookston, as it tells of the advantages of the city in a clear, concise manner. Every word uttered by Mr. Sathre's catalog is fact, and this is one of the reasons for the remarkable success of the Crookston Business College since its establishment here in the nineties.

Since last year, Mr. Sathre has added considerable additional room for the accommodation of his constantly growing school and this year will undoubtedly prove the best year which the school has ever experienced.—Crookston Times. adv.

Camping Will Be Popular.

Secretary C. N. Cosgrove has received many inquiries regarding the plans for tenting on the Fair grounds during the State Fair of 1907, and looks for a large number of people who will enjoy this plan of seeing the Fair at small expense in a novel way. The charge for a 7x9 tent is $2.00 for the week: for e 9x9 tent 2.50; for a 10x12 tent, $3; for a 12x14 tent, $3.50. Any one can figure out the size of the tent needed for his party. Cots may be rented for 50 cents and bedding for from 50 to 75 cents. It is believed that it will be generelly more setisfactory for parties to furnish their own bedding. Those who wish may bring their own tents and set them up on the camp ground which is a beautiful grove on the northern part of the Fair grounds. There is a pleutiful supply of pure water, good sanitary arrangements and plenty of places to buy meale and eupplies. The Fair is held during the week of Sept. 2 to 7.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT.

Nine-year-old Child Has Foot Severed By Binder.

A terrible accident happened in Terrebonne last Saturday afternoon, when Viola, the nine-yenr-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. X. Sauve, had her left foot completely cut off by the sickle of a binder.

Violo, in company with one or two other little ones, was out where the harvesting wes going on and were playing around all afternoon. Late in the afternoon, the hired man finished cutting a piece of barley end was down off the machine removing the last bundles before starting to cut the oats, when one of the little children climbed up on the seat and picked up the lines, which caused the horses to start. Little Viole was in front of the machine and before she could get away the sickle caught her and cut her left foot completely off, just above the ankle.

She was taken home as soon as possible and Dector Lemieux summoned. While the child was very weak from the loee of blood when the doctor arrived there, nevertheless the dressing of the wound wes accomplished successfully, and the little one is doing as well as possible considering the terrible ordeal she went through.

The child is exceptionally bright and pretty and it is indeed sad that she was so unfortunate as to receive an injury that will cripple her for life.

A Missing Bridegroom.

Thief River Press: People west and North of the city are speculnting on the whereabouts of Felix Arlington, a young man of thet vicinity, who has been missing since Auguet 1st or thereabouts. Arlington was to have been united in marriage on Sunday, August 4th, to a Miss Rafteseth, a pretty young woman whose parents reside at Strip. The wedding was to have taken place at the home of Mrs. Gust Nokken, a sister of the bride-to-be, and everything was in readiness for the approach-event.

A day or two previous to the day Arlington came to Thief River Falls presumably to make some further purchases, and he has not since been seen or heerd from by the people of his acquaintance. He is believed to have had considerable money on his person et the time. Whether he has voluntarily left the country or was the victim of foul pley is the question that is agitating the minds of his friends, some leaning towards one view, some the other—at ell events, there is no reason why he should leave just on the verge of his marriage to one of the attractive young ladies of this vicinity.

SEASON SOON OPEN

Local Nimrods Preparing For the Game Slaughter During the Next Month.

The open season for prairie chicken, ducks, geese and other specie of wild fowl will open Sunday, and it expected that a general exodus of sportsmen to the fields will occur on that day and from then on for several weeks.

The chicken crop is said to be very good this year and all reports are that there will be good sport in the hunting line. It was at first feared that on account of the lateness of the harvest too much grain would be standing to make successful hunting early in September. However the binder has been working overtime during the past ten days and practically all the grain except the flax will be cut by the last of this week.

Prairie chicken hunting is one of the best sports in the world and the Minnesota law is such now that it protects the game very fairly. Of course there is always some pre-season shooting done; but it has been very scarce in this vicinity this year and what chickens there ere will be ripe for Sunday.

It is seid thet there are also a lot of ducks in this vicinity this fall, and the followers of dog and gun anticipate a senson of pleasure during the next few weeks.

Brady Gets Contract.

Contractor James Brady, of this city, has been awarded the contract to erect the handsome new city hall building at Kelliher, Beltrami county. The contract price is $7,775 and Mr. Brady expects to commence work on the new structure very shortly. Mr. Brady last year built the new school house at Kelliher, and gave excellent satisfaction. The new city hall building will be modern in every respect and a great credit to the village of Kelliher.

St. Joseph's Church and School to have Big Fall Fair.

Rev. Father Fayolle announces that on the 18th, 19 and 20th of November, St. Joseph's school will hold a regular old-fashioned fair and bazaar.

It is been nearly five years since the last fair was held at St. Joseph's and the congregation is entering into the work of preparing for this big time with a vim.

The details have not been arranged as yet but it is planned to make this fair similar to the ones held in the past. The ladies' will serve meals every day. Fancy articles, will be offered for sale and several voting contests will afford great amusement.

The proceeds of the fair will be largely used to aid St. Joseph's school, and as this is a most worthy cause the hazaar should be well patronized.

While the readers of THE GAZETTE have been learning how the different creameries in this vicinity were paying big returns to their patrons every month, the plant at Brooks has been plugging away and saying nothing, although every month the patrons of the plant have been getting big checks, and have constantly worn "the smile that won't come off as a result thereof.

KICK STANDARD OUT OF STATE

SUIT WILL BE STARTED IN DISTRICT COURT TO OUST OIL OCTOPUS.

St. Paul, Aug. 21. — Within a few days the State of Minnesota will institute proceedings against the Standard Oil company in an attempt to oust the company from the state because of alleged violations of the Hinton anti-discrimination law passed last winter. Attorney General E. T. Young is authority for the statement that the suit will be instituted in a few days in the district court of Ramsey or Hennepin county.

Since the filing of the complaint with Secretary of State Schmahl in May an investigation has been made quietly of the evidence which could be produced in the event of the suit being brought. The investigation included analyses of the grade of oil sold at various points in which it is alleged there was a discrimination in prices, and of the other evidence which could be produced to prove the sale of the oil at each of the places at the various prices alleged in the complaint.

Evidence Is Ample.

At a conference in the attorney general's office yesterday with representatives of the independent oil dealers this evidence was reviewed. That it is believed to be ample to secure conviction on the charge of discrimination is evidenced by the fact that the suits will be brought without delay.

The charge which the Standard Oil company will have to meet is that of discriminating between various localities in the price of oil of the same grade. The prosecution will be under the Hinton law, which makes the penalty for a conviction under the law the cancellation of the company's license to do business in this state. This law provides that the price of oil must be the same in all parts of the state, making due allowances for the difference in freight rates. Violations of the law by any person or corporation or any agent or officer or member of a corporation is made a gross misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of not to exceed $5,000 or imprisonment in the county jail not to exceed one year, or both.

REGISTERED LETTERS RIFLED.

Mail Bag Taken From St. Paul Train Found In River at Red Wing.

Red Wing, Minn., Aug. 21.—A leather United States mail bag was found floating in the Mississippi river by a fishing party Sunday afternoon. In it were 300 registered letters which had been opened and replaced. The sack had been weighted and an attempt made to sink it.

Railroad and government detectives who are working on the case say that it was stolen from the east-bound St. Paul train No. 2, which usually reaches this city at midnight. It was late Sunday morning. The letters were addressed to Winona, St. Charles and Tracy, and the bag is supposed to have been lying near the door of the car when the train stood at the Red Wing station. The supposition is that it was then stolen and the contents rifled.

The bag was opened by removing the lock, which is taken to show that the work was not that of amateurs, who would have cut the sack open. Several personal checks found in the letters had been replaced, although it is believed that a large amount of valuables was secured. There are no clues.

CROP INSURANCE PAYS.

Farmer Who Is Hail Sufferer Will Get at Least $2,127.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Aug. 21.—By investing $112 in insuring his crops, James Ellis, a farmer residing near Doland, whose crops were totally destroyed by the disastrous hail storm which recently swept over that part of the state, destroying crops on several hundred quarter sections of land, will receive the sum of $2,239 insurance on his destroyed crops. Thus, above the cost of the insurance, he will have at least the sum of $2,127 for his summer's work.

FORBIDDEN PLAY FATAL.

Little Girl Falls Into Irrigation Ditch and Is Drowned.

Belle Fourche, S. D., Aug. 21. — Floating in Crooked Oak creek, on the Ericson branch, near Sonoma, the body of Lempi Latvoian, an eight-year-old girl, was found by ranch hands. The investigation by Coroner Ohampnay showed that the child had been playing in the irrigation ditch, after being forbidden to do so by her guardian and accidentally had fallen in and had been drowned.

ISLANDS ARE AFLOAT.

Small Tracts Adrift Menace Pier In Lake Jefferson.

Le Sueur Center, Minn., Aug. 21.—Three islands, ranging from one-half an acre to four or five yards across, are floating about in Lake Jefferson, the summer resort ten miles south of here. The largest one ran against the pier and except for the putting out of rowboats and launches it would have smashed it. It is feared that it may drift back at night and do some damage.

BEST STATE FAIR IN THE WORLD.

Numerous Improvements Have Been Made for Minnesota's Exposition.

Everything is in readiness for the Minnesota state fair, which will open at St. Paul on Sept. 2. Progress has marked each year's exposition, and the 1907 fair will be the biggest, most comprehensive, most attractive and most interesting event in the history of Minnesota—which means the best state fair in the world.

Numerous improvements have been made on the grounds from year to year until the "city" presents an entirely different appearance from what it did some years ago. As soon as the money was available and conditions warranted, wooden structures have been replaced with more substantial buildings, giving the fair a permanency and stability which insures lasting success.

More improvements have been made possible this year through the purchase of forty acres of land to the north of the original grounds. This acquisition will relieve the congestion which it has been impossible to avoid in the past when people crowded in by the hundred thousand. With the extension of the grounds there is offered not only more room for more buildings and exhibits, but also more space for visitors to move around.

Just north of the manufactures' hall, erected last year, will be found a new structure, which is an annex to the hall. It is in the shape of a Greek cross, occupying a site 140 by 180 feet.

Still further north will be found the new dairy building, erected at a cost of $25,000. It is 148 by 177 feet in dimensions. In the center of the hall will be installed a large refrigerator, costing $6,000. It will have glass sides, giving the spectator the opportunity of seeing butter in prime condition.

On the additional plot of land has been erected a magnificent poultry building. It is one story, rectangular in shape and 146 by 194 feet in dimensions. It is admirably arranged in regard to ventilation.

Part of the new land will be devoted to the exhibition of farm machinery, while the rest of it is occupied by a grove which will be used as a camp ground.

HUNDRED AND FIVE YEARS.

Woman Dies After Attaining a Remarkable Age.

A woman was buried at Wells last week who had attained to the remarkable age of one hundred and five years or over. Her name was Mrs. Marie Praiss, and she was a native of Poland, emigrating to this country forty years ago. Her exact age was not known, but her personal recollections and certain family records fix it as not less than a hundred and five, and probably a hundred and eight years. She distinctly remembered visiting one of the Napoleonic battlefields in her native country in the year 1812, and was at that time a large girl. She was married at the age of twenty-seven and reared a large family, but she lives to see not only her own children but grandchildren die from old age. She had made her home at Wells for many years with a granddaughter. She preserved her faculties to a remarkable degree to the time of her death. Her carriage was erect, her sight and hearing unimpaired and she habitually worked about the home at light housekeeping duties. She had never been sick a day in her life from any organic disease. She was about until twenty minutes before her demise. She was a devout Roman Catholic and seldom missed church services.

GAME SEASON OPENS SEPT. 1.

A License Required In Every Foreign County.

The season for small game opens Sept. 1, and that the public may be informed as to the laws covering the shooting of the same, Carlos Avery, executive agent of the game and fish commission, is sending circular letters to the newspapers of the state, asking them to co-operate with the department in giving the information publicity. The idea is to reduce the number of arrests for violations.

No license is required for a hunter to shoot small game in the county in which he resides, but if he hunts in another county he must have a permit. This will cost him $1. This money goes to the game and fish commission. During the first half of the present year 135 arrests were made for violations of the game laws, and 125 convictions resulted. Fishing with nets was responsible for the largest number of arrests.

FOR COUNTY RECORDS.

Huge record books, one for each county in the state, are being sent out to county auditors from the state auditor's office, under the provisions of the new law relating to state loans. These books are furnished without cost to the counties for keeping a record of state loans to the county or any of its subdivisions, with the payments on each loan. The state is also supplying counties, cities and school districts with the proper blanks in applying for the loans.

LAKE COUNTY IS FERTILE.

Gen. Andrews Tells of a Trip Through That Part of Minnesota.

Gen. C. C. Andrews, state forestry commissioner, recently made a trip through Lake county along the north shore of Lake Superior. He says the district is admirably adapted to agriculture. There are large tracts from which the best of the timber has been cut and the farmers who have cleared parts of this land find it productive. He made a trip to the northeast on a road which was originally built for a logging road, but which now runs a regular passenger train for the accommodation of those who wish to go into that part of the county.

In speaking of his visit Gen. Andrews said:

"During my visit into Lake county last week I went forty-four miles by railroad, from Knife river in a north-easterly direction, and was impressed by some of the advantages there for settlers. Lake county contains 1,300,000 acres of land, much of which is good for agriculture, though comparatively little is under cultivation. Much of the land that I saw will produce, among other crops, wheat, oats, potatoes and good hay. There are numerous streams of soft water which contain trout.

"The surface is undulating, and the more valuable timber having been removed it will not require much labor to subdue the soil. It struck me that large owners of land might well afford to give each settler twenty acres of land with the privilege of buying sixty more under certain conditions for cultivation. Lumber companies, however, are absorbed in their own affairs and cannot go into the immigration business; but commercial and immigration clubs of the various cities interested might be able to carry such a scheme into effect.

"I talked with Jacob Schaf, a German farmer, who has been cultivating a farm about twenty miles north of Beaver bay for twenty-six years. He has wheat four feet high and is enthusiastic about the agricultural advantages of the country.

"The occupation of agricultural lands by a good class of settlers would lessen the dangers of forest fires.

"I saw a very handsome and large body of white pine yet remaining in the vicinity of Gooseberry river and was told that it had lately been sold for $13 per thousand feet standing."

TWO REVOKED.

Mutual Companies Failed to Comply With New Law.

Licenses of two mutual life insurance companies doing business in the state have been revoked by J. A. Hartigan, state insurance commissioner, for failure to make the deposit of securities required by the new law. The companies are the Equitable Accident Company of Boston and the Finnish National Life Insurance Association of Hancock, Mich. The new law requires such companies to have deposited in some state securities equal to their reserve up to $25,000. Notice was sent these companies Aug. 8, giving them ten days in which to comply. No answer was received from the Boston company, while the Finnish National replied that they had $2,000 on deposit in Michigan. The Minnesota law requires $5,000. The last named company has five agents in Minnesota, chiefly among the miners on the iron range.

BUTTER FAMINE IN SIGHT.

Late and Unfavorable Season Curtails Usual Summer Supply.

A butter famine next winter would not be a surprise to those who follow the butter market closely. Owing to the lateness of the season, butter that should have been put in cold storage in June did not appear on the market until July, and then the price was from 23 to 24 cents a pound.

As a consequence not more than 75 per cent as much butter has been stored this year as last. Dealers have not seen their way clear to buy butter at such prices and hold it for higher prices next winter.

Eggs that were stored in April are being taken out now to supply the demand of a trade that seeks the best eggs. Fresh eggs at this time of the year are said to be slightly tinged by the heat, and well kept storage eggs of April are considered a little better than the hot weather product.

STATE LAND GRANTS.

Sells Easement for Right of Way to International Falls.

Right of way across ninety-nine forties of state land has been granted for the new line of the Big Fork & International, which is the last link of the Minnesota & International line to International Falls. About 225 acres are included in the line's right of way, for which the state receives $5 per acre, getting $1,123 in all.

The deal has been approved according to law by the governor and state auditor. The state does not give the company title to the land, but only an easement, so that if the line should ever be abandoned the title would revert to the state.

IT is not always easy to shift a political mantle, and even should Mr. Taft succeed he may find that it doesn't fit.

RED LAKE COUNTY isn't worrying about a panic in Wall Street. We are threshing golden grain and are hauling milk to the creameries.

THE railroad companies pretend to be somewhat disappointed at finding that they haven't lost any money since the two-cent fare went into effect.

SOME of the strongest third-term Roosevelt men shy at the suggestion of getting Governor Johnson into the race again. The view-point makes a lot of difference.

JUDGE LOCHREN has decided that the Minneapolis council cannot demand six rides for a quarter from the street car company. The Judge ought to give a decision in favor of the people just once to sort of take off the curse.

SOME of the political writers in the cities are trying to make a governor out of Halvor Steenerson, but as Halvor doesn't seem to have any trouble getting back to congress as often as he likes, the GAZETTE opines that he is not anxious to be side-tracked.

LIKE a voice from the grave comes a suggestion from former Governor Van Sant that Teddy ought to run again on account of his warfare on the railroads. To be entirely consistent the ex-governor should insist that it is about time he, too, was given something good.

THE gentler sex has been slandered again. The mean old thing in charge of the North Branch Review says: "The society for the prevention of Unnecessary Noises should have been organized in time to have prevented the Creator from making woman."

THE Windom Citizen man has a habit of giving the monopolists a hot shot now and then. Here's a good one:

Did you ever hear of postmasters of the country going on a strike? Hardly. And were the telegraphs run by the people for the people the country would not have been paying excessive rates, with a disagreeable strike every once in a while to tie up business.

THE St. Peter Free Press is tired of newspaper criticism of of the lumber thieves and says it is time the talk were altogether cut out. We should not be surprised if Ray Jones Tom Shevlin, and other timber exploiters agreed with the Free Press. One thing sure, the stealing has been stopped, and that is more important than stopping the talk.

THEY tell a good story of carpetbag days in Alabama. The negro regime was in good working order and a coarse illiterate darkey approached the governor for a job. "My dear fellow," the governor protested, "every position is filled except that of chief justice." "Wall" drawled the negro somewhat disappointedly, "if you haven't got nuthin' else, guess I'll have to take it!"

THE latest gubernational possibility is Dar Reese. Well, after Dunn and Cole the Republican stomach ought to be prepared for almost anything. The Reese boomers ought to remember that the people of Minnesota are learning to be a bit particular and the party brand no longer insures an election. If you don't believe it consult the returns of 1904 and 1906

OVER in Austria more than 100,000 persons are kept busy making imitation ivory products from skimmed milk and they do their work so well that the average person cannot tell them from the original article, says a leading dairy newspaper. Milk-stone, as this skimmed milk substance is called, is hard and tough. Besides piano keys and collars, pepper and salt shakers, pen holders ink wells, umbrella holders, boxes, doll heads, doorknobs, mantle pieces clocks, paper racks, pin heads, collar buttons, picture frames, rubber and amber imitations, glue and putty and many other articles too numerous to mention are made from skimmed milk.

The following paragraph from an exchange is a useful reminder about the beginning of a school year: The best time to enter a school is on the first day of a school year; the best time to leave it is on the last day of the last term of the school year. First year pupils, that is pupils who are entering school for the first time after they are six years old, should not enter after the first month of the term is past. The interruption and hindrance to the rest of the pupils of the grade is more than any considerate parent ought to demand. If your child does not become of school-age (six years old) till after the first month of the term is past or if you do not get ready to send him the first month, keep him out till the beginning of next term.

Hunting License.

The law relative to hunters' license remains the same in effect as it was previous to the recent session of legislature, though somewhat different in wording. No license is required for a hunter to shoot small game in the county in which he resides but if he desires to hunt outside his own county he must procure a license, costing $1.00, from his own county auditor. The license permits a hunter to shoot all kinds of game in season, and confers shipping priveleges.

The fund derived from the sale of licenses goes into the game and fish commission's general fund to be used for protection and propagation of fish and game. The funds available for protection of game are limited and all who enjoy hunting should realize that when they purchase a license, they are contributing their mite to the work of game protection for their own benefit and benefit of their children.

Capt. C. H. Jenks Dead.

Captain C. H. Jenks, for a great many years superintendent of the northern division of the Great Northern railroad, and a man well-known all over the Northwest, died at his Crookston home last Thursday afternoon after a brief illness. Death was caused by a chronic ailment of the blood vessels of the brain. Capt. Jenks began his railroad work in 1869, and his rise was rapid. He had been superintendent of several divisons of the Great Northern and since early in 1904 he was located at Crookston. Last September he was given a years leave of absence with full pay, intending to take a trip around the world, but ill health prevented him doing this, and he failed gradually until death came last week to relieve him. Capt. Jenks was a veteran of the civil war and active in Grand Army circles as well as lodge work. He was recognized as one of the best railroad men in the west and the northern division developed into one of the best on the system during his management. He was highly esteemed by all who knew him and his death caused great sorrow among the railroad boys who had worked with him for so many years. The remains were shipped to Litchfield, his old home, for interment.

ARE PHYSICIANS' PRESCRIPTIONS NOSTRUMS?

To one not qualified, and few laymen are, to discriminate intelligently between physicians' prescriptions, proprietary medicines and nostrums, it may seem little short of a crime to hint even that physicians' prescriptions are in any manner related to nostrums; nevertheless, an impartial examination of all the facts in the case leads irresistibly to the conclusion that every medicinal preparation compounded and dispensed by a physician is, in the strict sense of the word, a nostrum, and that the average, ready-prepared proprietary remedy is superior to the average specially-prepared physicians' prescription.

What is a nostrum? According to the Standard Dictionary a nostrum is "a medicine the composition of which is kept a secret." Now, when a physician compounds and dispenses with his own hands a remedy for the treatment of a disease—and it is authoritatively stated that probably 60 per cent. of all physicians' prescriptions in this country are so dispensed—the names and quantities of the ingredients which constitute the remedy are not made known to the patient. Hence, since its composition is kept a secret by the physician, the remedy or prescription is unquestionably, in the true meaning of the word, a Simon-pure nostrum. Furthermore, the prescription compounded by the average physician is more than likely to be a perfect jumble—replete with therapeutic, physiologic and chemical incompatibilities and bearing all the earmarks of pharmaceutical incompetency; for it is now generally admitted that unless a physician has made a special study of pharmacy and passed some time in a drug store for the purpose of gaining a practical knowledge of modern pharmaceutical methods, he is not fitted to compound remedies for his patients. Moreover, a physician who compounds his own prescriptions not only deprives the pharmacist of his just emoluments, but he endangers the lives of patients; for it is only by the detection and elimination of errors in prescriptions by clever, competent prescriptionists that the safety of the public can be effectually shielded from the criminal blunders of ignorant physicians.

Nor can it be said that the average physician is any more competent to formulate a prescription than he is to compound it. When memorized or directly copied from a book of "favorite prescriptions by famous physicians," or from some text-book or medical journal, the prescription may be all that it should be. It is only when the physician is required to originate a formula on the spur of the moment that his incompetency is distinctly evident. Seemingly, however, the physicians of the United States are little worse than the average British physician, for we find Dr. James Burnett, lecturer on Practical Materia Medica and Pharmacy, Edinburgh, lamenting in the Medical Magazine the passing of the prescription and bemoaning the fact that seldom does he find a "final man" able to devise a prescription even in "good contracted Latin."

And what, it may be asked, is the status of the written prescription—the prescription that is compounded and dispensed by the pharmacist—is it, too, a nostrum? It may be contended that the patient, with the written formula in his possession, may learn the character of the remedy prescribed. So, possibly, he might if he understood Latin and were a physician or a pharmacist, but as he usually possesses no professional training and cannot read Latin, the prescription is practically a dead secret to him. Furthermore, the average prescription is so badly written and so greatly abbreviated that even the pharmacist, skilled as he usually is in deciphering medical hieroglyphs, is constantly obliged to interview prescribers to find out what actually has been prescribed. It may also be contended, that inasmuch as the formula is known to both physician and pharmacist the prescription cannot therefore be a secret. But with equal truth it might be contended that the formula of any so-called nostrum is not a secret since it is known to both proprietor and manufacturer; for it must not be forgotten that, according to reliable authority, 85 per cent. of the proprietors of so-called patent medicines prepared in this country have their remedies made for them by large, reputable manufacturing pharmacists. But even should a patient be able to recognize the names of the ingredients mentioned in a formula he would only know half the story. It is seldom, for instance, that alcohol is specifically mentioned in a prescription, for it is usually masked in the form of tinctures and fluid extracts, as are a great many other substances. It is evident, therefore, that the ordinary formulated prescription is, to the average patient, little less than a secret remedy or nostrum.

On the other hand, the formulae of nearly all the proprietary medicines that are exploited exclusively to the medical profession as well as those of a large percentage of the proprietary remedies that are advertised to the public (the so-called patent medicines) are published in full. Under the Food and Drugs Act, every medicinal preparation entering interstate commerce is now required to have the proportion or quantity of alcohol, opium, cocaine and other habit-forming or harmful ingredients which it may contain plainly printed on the label. As physicians' prescriptions seldom or never enter interstate commerce they are practically exempt under the law. And if it be necessary for the public to know the composition of proprietary remedies, as is contended by those who through ignorance or for mercenary reasons are opposing the sale of all household remedies, why is it not equally necessary for patients to know the composition of the remedy prescribed by a physician? Does any sane person believe that the opium in a physician's prescription is less potent or less likely to create a drug habit than the opium in a proprietary medicine? As a matter of fact, more opium-addicts and cocain-fiends have been made through the criminal carelessness of ignorant physicians than by any other means.

Unquestionably, there are a number of proprietary remedies on the market the sales of which should be prohibited, and no doubt they will be when the requirements of the Food and Drugs Act are rigidly enforced; many are frauds, pure and simple, and some are decidedly harmful. Of the average proprietary remedy, however, it may truthfully be said that it is distinctly better than the average physicians' prescription; for not only is its composition less secret, but it is prepared for the proprietor by reputable manufacturing pharmacists in magnificently equipped laboratories and under the supervision and advice of able chemists, competent physicians and skillful pharmacists. It should not be considered strange, therefore, that so many physicians prefer to prescribe these ready-prepared proprietary remedies rather than trust those of their own devising.

PICKETT'S OLD FRIEND.

A Story Told of Abraham Lincoln's Visit to Richmond.

The day after the great fire following the fall of Richmond, Lincoln, with a small bodyguard, walked through the streets of the charred city. As he approached the corner occupied by Gen. Pickett's residence he directed the guard to wait, and to their astonishment ran two steps at a time up to the door and rapped. The servants had fled. The "baby bride" had never seen President Lincoln, but she had read his letter to her husband and from it had learned to hold in the highest esteem the great Northern President. With her baby in her arms she opened the door, says The World To-Day, and looked up at the tall, gaunt man with the sad face and uncouth ways.

Without a word of explanation he asked:

"Is George Pickett about?"

To hear the husband's name bereft of its title by a Yankee at that moment was almost the limit, especially as a rumor had floated about Richmond concerning the fate which awaited the leaders of the confederacy.

With all the proud dignity she could command the baby bride replied:

"Gen. Pickett is not at home."

The stranger seemed disappointed and as he turned to go remarked:

"I am Abraham Lincoln, an old friend of George's."

"Not President Lincoln!" Mrs. Pickett exclaimed. The tall man shook his head, repeating:

"No. Just Abraham Lincoln, George Pickett's old friend."

Following the instinct promptings of the heart which still governs her, the baby bride thrust her baby boy into the arms of the gaunt Yankee, as her best effort to express her veneration and confidence, saying:

"I am George Pickett's wife and this is George Pickett's baby."

MANIA FOR DANCING.

Whole Family Had Irresistible Desire to Walk on Hands.

A strange scene was witnessed the other day in the office of a Paris police superintendent.

A woman of middle age named Mme. Brerotti entered his bureau to lodge a complaint on the subject of her house. She could not, she said, enter her apartment without an irresistible temptation to walk on her hands.

Concluding that he had to deal with a lunatic, the officer sent for the woman's son, whom he told to have his mother placed under care.

"But she is sane," said the young man. "What she says about walking on her hands is quite true, and I feel it myself, as does an uncle who lives with us."

The uncle, a man of 50, was summoned, and he had not been talking to the officers many minutes before he declared the temptation was mastering him. Without more ado he began careening about on his hands, mother and son followed suit, and the superintendent watched all three move easily about on their hands with their heels in the air.

Seeing that it was a case of family lunatics, he hastily promised to "have the house disinfected," and drew up a report to the asylum authorities.

The Motor Face.

SISTER ROSE.

A STORY OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION

BY WILKIE COLLINS

CHAPTER XXI.

HE SPOKE the last sentence with a faint smile, and with the air of a man trying, in spite of himself, to treat a grave subject lightly. His face clouded again, however, in a moment, when he looked towards his sister as he ceased. Her work had once more dropped on her lap; her face was turned away so that he could not see it; but he knew by the trembling of her clasped hands, as they rested on her knee, and by the slight swelling of the veins on her neck, which she could not hide from him, that her boasted strength of nerve had deserted her. Three years of repose had not yet enabled her to hear her marriage name uttered, or to be present when past times of deathly suffering and terror were referred to, without betraying the shock in her face and manner. Trudaine looked saddened, but in no way surprised by what he saw. Making a sign to Lomaque to say nothing, he rose and took up his sister's hood, which lay on a window-seat near him.

"Come, Rose," he said, "the sun is shining, the sweet spring air is inviting us out. Let us have a quiet stroll along the banks of the stream. Why should we keep our good friend here cooped up in this narrow little room, when we have miles and miles of beautiful landscape to show him on the other side of the threshold? Come! it is high treason to Queen Nature to remain indoors on such a morning as this."

Without waiting for her to reply, he put on her hood, drew her arm through his, and led the way out. Lomaque's face grew grave as he followed them.

"I am glad I only showed the bright side of my budget of news in her presence," thought he. "She is not well at heart yet. I might have hurt her, poor thing; I might have hurt her again sadly, if I had not held my tongue."

They walked for a little while down the banks of the stream, talking of indifferent matters, then returned to the cottage. By this time Rose had recovered her spirits, and could listen with interest and amusement to Lomaque's drily-humorous description of his life as a clerk at Chalons-sur-Marne. They parted for a little while at the cottage door. Rose retired to the upstairs room from which she had been summoned by her brother. Trudaine and Lomaque returned to wander again along the banks of the stream.

With one accord, and without a word passing between them, they left the neighborhood of the cottage hurriedly, then stopped on a sudden and attentively looked each other in the face—looked in silence for an instant. Trudaine spoke first.

"I thank you for having spared her," he began, abruptly. "She is not strong enough yet to bear hearing of a new misfortune, unless I break the tidings to her first."

"You suspect me, then, of bringing bad news?" said Lomaque.

"I know you do. When I saw your first look at her, after we were all seated in the cottage parlor, I knew it. Speak! without fear, without caution, without one useless word of preface. After three years of repose, if it pleases God to afflict us again, I can bear the trial calmly, and, if need be, can strengthen her to bear it calmly too. I say again, Lomaque, speak at once, and speak out. I know your news is bad, for I know beforehand that it is news of Danville."

"You are right, my bad news is news of him."

"He has discovered the secret of our escape from the guillotine——"

"No—he has not a suspicion of it. He believes—as his mother, as every one does—that you were both executed the day after the Revolutionary Tribunal sentenced you to death."

"Lomaque, you speak positively of that belief of his—but you cannot be certain of it."

"I can on the most indisputable, the most startling evidence—on the authority of Danville's own act. You have asked me to speak out?"

"I ask you again—I insist on it. Your news, Lomaque—your news, without another word of preface!"

"You shall have it without another word of preface. Danville is on the point of being married."

As the answer was given they both stopped by the bank of the stream, and again looked each other in the face. There was a minute of dead silence between them. During that minute the water bubbling by happily over its bed of pebbles, seemed strangely loud, the singing of birds in a little wood by the stream side strangely near and shrill, in both their ears. The light breeze, for all its mid-day warmth, touched their cheeks coldly; and the spring sunlight pouring on their faces, felt as if it were glimmering on them through winter clouds.

"Let us walk on," said Trudaine, in a low voice. "I was prepared for bad news, yet not for that. Are you certain of what you have just told me?"

"As certain as that the stream here is flowing by our side. Hear how I made the discovery, and you will doubt no longer. Before last week I knew nothing of Danville, except that his arrest on suspicion by Robespierre's order was, as events turned out, the saving of his life. He was imprisoned, as I told you, on the evening after he had heard your names read from the death-list at the prison grate. He remained in confinement at the Temple, unnoticed in the political confusion out of doors, just as you remained unnoticed at St. Lazare; and he profited in precisely the same manner that you profited by the timely insurrection which overthrew the Reign of Terror. I knew this, and I knew that he walked out of prison in the character of a persecuted victim of Robespierre's—and for better than three years past I know no more. Now listen. Last week I happened to be waiting in the shop of my employer, Citizen Clairfait, for some papers to take into the counting house when an old man enters with a sealed parcel, which he hands to one of the shopmen, saying:

"'Give that to Citizen Clairfait.'

"'Any name?' says the shopman.

"'The name is of no consequence,' answers the old man; 'but if you please you can give mine. Say the parcel came from Citizen Dubois;' and then he goes out. His name, in connection with his elderly look, strikes me directly.

"'Does that old fellow live at Chalons?' I ask.

"'No,' says the shopman. 'He is here in attendance on a customer of ours—an old ex-aristocrat named Danville. She is on a visit in our town.'

"I leave you to imagine how that reply startles and amazes me. The shopman can answer none of the other questions I put to him; but the next day I am asked to dinner by my employer (who, for his brother's sake, shows me the utmost civility). On entering the room I find his daughter just putting away a lavender-colored silk scarf, on which she has been embroidering in silver what looks to me like a crest and coat-of-arms.

"'I don't mind your seeing what I am about, Citizen Lomaque,' says she; 'for I know my father can trust you. That scarf is sent back to us by the purchaser, an ex-emigrant lady of the old aristocratic school, to have her family coat-of-arms embroidered on it.'

"'Rather a dangerous commission, even in these mercifully democratic times, is it not?' says I.

"'The old lady, you must know,' says she, 'is as proud as Lucifer; and having got back safely to France in these days of moderate republicanism, thinks she may indulge with impunity in all her old-fashioned notions. She has been an excellent customer of ours, so my father thought it best to humor her, without, however, trusting her commission to any of the work-room women to execute. We are not living under the Reign of Terror now, certainly; still there is nothing like being on the safe side.'

"'Nothing,' I answer. 'Pray what is this ex-emigrant's name?'

"'Danville,' replies the Citoyenne Clairfait. 'She is going to appear in that fine scarf at her son's marriage.'

"'Marriage?' I exclaim, perfectly thunderstruck.

"'Yes,' says she. 'What is there so amazing in that? By all accounts, the son, poor man, deserves to make a lucky marriage this time. His first wife was taken away from him in the Reign of Terror by the guillotine.'

"'Whom is he going to marry?' I inquired, still breathless.

"'The daughter of General Berthelin—an ex-aristocrat by family, like the old lady, but by principle as good a republican as ever lived—a hard-drinking, loud-swearing, big-whiskered old soldier who snaps his fingers at his ancestors and says we are all descended from Adam, the first genuine sans-culotte in the world.'

"In this way the Citoyenne Clairfait gossips on all dinner-time, but says nothing more of any importance. I, with my old police-office habits, set to the next day, and try to make some discoveries for myself. The sum of what I find out is this: Danville's mother is staying with General Berthelin's sister and daughter at Chalons, and Danville himself is expected to arrive every day to escort them all three to Paris, where the marriage-contract is to be signed at the general's house. Discovering this, and seeing that prompt action is now of the most vital importance, I undertake, as I told you, my employer's commission for Paris; depart with all speed; and stop here on my way. Wait! I have not done yet. All the haste I can make is not enough to give me a good start of the wedding party. On my road here, the diligence by which I travel is passed by a carriage, posting along at full speed. I cannot see inside that carriage; but I look at the box seat, and recognize on it the old man Dubois. He whirls by in a cloud of dust, but I am certain of him, and I say to myself, what I now say to you, no time is to be lost!"

"No time shall be lost," answered Trudaine, firmly. "Three years have passed," he continued, in a lower voice, speaking to himself rather than to Lomaque; "three years since the day when I led my sister out of the gates of the prison—three years since I said in my heart I will be patient, and will not seek to avenge myself. Our wrongs cry from earth to heaven; from man, who inflicts, to God, who redresses. When the day of reckoning comes, let it be the day of His vengeance, not of mine. In my heart I said those words—I have been true to them—I have waited. The day has come, and the duty it demands of me shall be fulfilled."

[illegible]

Lomaque spoke again. "Your sister!" he began hesitatingly.

"It is there only that my purpose falters," said the other earnestly. "If it were but possible to spare her all knowledge of this last trial, and to leave the accomplishment of the terrible task to me alone?"

"I think it is possible," interposed Lomaque. "Listen to what I advise. We must depart for Paris by the diligence to-morrow morning, and we must take your sister with us—to-morrow will be time enough; people don't sign marriage contracts on the evening after a long day's journey. We must go then, and we must take your sister. Leave the care of her in Paris, and the responsibility of keeping her in ignorance of what you are doing, to me. Go to this General Berthelin's house at a time when you know Danville is there (we can get that knowledge through the servants), confront him without a moment's previous warning; confront him as a man risen from the dead; confront him before every soul in the room, though the room should be full of people—and leave the rest to the self-betrayal of a panic-stricken man. Say but three words, and your duty will be done; you may return to your sister, and may depart with her in safety to your old retreat at Rouen, or where you please, on the very day when you have put it out of her infamous husband's power to add another to the list of his crimes."

"You forget the suddenness of the journey to Paris," said Trudaine. "How are we to account for it without the risk of awakening my sister's suspicions?"

"Trust that to me," answered Lomaque. "Let us return to the cottage at once. No; not you," he added suddenly, as they turned to retrace their steps. "There is that in your face which would betray us. Leave me to go back alone—I will say that you have gone to give some orders at the inn. Let us separate immediately. You will recover your self-possession—you will get to look yourself again sooner if you are left alone—I know enough of you to know that. We will not waste another minute in explanations; even minutes are precious to us on such a day as this. By the time you are fit to meet your sister again, I shall have had time to say all I wish to her, and shall be waiting at the cottage to tell you the result."

He looked at Trudaine, and his eyes seemed to brighten again with something of the energy and sudden decision of the days when he was a man in office under the Reign of Terror. "Leave it to me," he said; and waving his hand, threaded away quickly in the direction of the cottage.

Nearly an hour passed before Trudaine ventured to follow him. When he at length entered the path that led to the garden gate, he saw his sister waiting at the cottage-door. Her face looked unusually animated; and she ran forward a step or two to meet him.

"Oh, Louis!" she said, "I have a confession to make, and I must beg you to hear it patiently to the end. You must know that our good Lomaque, though he came in tired from his walk, occupied himself, the first thing, at my request, in writing the letter which is to secure to us our dear old home by the banks of the Seine. When he had done, he looked at me and said, 'I should like to be present at your happy return to the house where I first saw you.' 'Oh, come, come with us!' I said directly. 'I am not an independent man,' he answered; 'I have a margin of time allowed me at Paris, certainly, but it is not long—if I were only my own master——' and then he stopped. Louis! I remembered all we owed to him; I remembered there is no sacrifice we ought not be too glad to make for his sake; I felt the kindness of the wish he expressed: and, perhaps, I was a little influenced by my own impatience to see once more my flower-garden and the rooms where we used to be so happy.

Giants and Dwarfs.

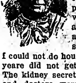
The town of Ligonier, Noble county, Ind., claims the unique distinction of having for citizens the largest and smallest men, physically considered, in the west. George Washington Walker is without question the heaviest man in Indiana, if not in the United States. He weighs 500 pounds, is now 46 years old and is adding steadily to his weight at the rate of twenty-five pounds each year of his life. His waist measurement is seventy-six inches, chest under arms sixty-eight inches and arm twenty-five inches. He is in excellent health but finds locomotion rather difficult, although he travels about in a specially constructed conveyance. He is the father of two bright children and lives a retired life, attempting to avoid much notoriety. In the heated season he lives altogether in the cellar of his residence. Walker's physical antitype is Jesse Walker, his neighbor. The latter is 19 years of age and possesses a body of fair size. His legs, however, are twelve inches in length. He is three feet three inches tall and weighs but fifty pounds. Jesse is a promising youth, mentally well equipped, and as averse to notoriety as George Washington Walker. The two men have received flattering offers from museum proprietors, but at present have no desire for that kind of fame.—St. Louis Republic.

Ingersoll Worries Them No

Ingersoll does not trouble us ministers much. His talk may be witty, but his jibes and arguments are a rehash of those of Paine and Voltaire, arguments which have been answered so often that we are tired of answering arguments which are so ancient and musty that we are surprised that Ingersoll is willing to be so far behind the time as to dress them up and trot them out again. They are about as effective for his purpose as a 17th century blunderbuss would be against a modern [illegible]

TEN YEARS OF PAIN.

Unable to Do Even Housework Because of Kidney Troubles.



Mrs. Margaret Emmerich, of Clinton St., Napoleon, O., says: "For fifteen years I was a great sufferer from kidney trouble. My back pained me terribly. Every turn or move caused sharp, shooting pains. My eyesight was poor, dark spots appeared before me, and I had dizzy spells. For ten years I could not do housework, and for two years did not get out of the house. The kidney secretions were irregular, and doctors were not helping me. Doan's Kidney Pills brought me quick relief, and finally cured me. They saved my life."

Heavyweight Kitchen Folks.

"It will do you more good to smell food that is being cooked than it will to eat it after it is cooked," was the astounding statement made by a restaurant man.

"That is the reason why so many professional cooks are heavyweights. You never saw any one who became a chef and stayed at it any length of time but became fleshy. Cooks never eat to any great extent, except to taste the food at times while it is being cooked in order to see if it is done. It is the odor of the food in the kitchen that makes them fat.

The same will apply in the case of the housewife. Continuous work in the kitchen makes fleshy women and healthy women. Cooking is the healthiest occupation in the world."

Saving Further Trouble.

Ambassador Bryce at a dinner in Urbana, Ill., gave a young lady some tips on European travel.

"And above all," he said, "don't fail to tip your cabman liberally. Hansoms and four-wheelers would be cheap in London if one only paid the legal fare for them, but he who tries to pay the legal fare—well, he doesn't try it more than once.

"One day I saw an old lady stop a hansom, look up at the driver and say timidly:

"'Driver, I want to go to Ludgate circus. I see by the book that the legal fare is two shillings. If I give you three will you promise not to swear at me afterward?'"

FOOD FACTS
Grape-Nuts
FOOD
A Body Balance

People hesitate at the statement that the famous food, Grape-Nuts, yields as much nourishment from one pound as can be absorbed by the system from ten pounds of meat, bread, wheat or oats. Ten pounds of meat might contain more nourishment than one pound of Grape-Nuts, but not in shape that the system will absorb as large a proportion of, as the body can take up from one pound of Grape-Nuts.

This food contains the selected parts of wheat and barley which are prepared and by natural means predigested, transformed into a form of sugar, ready for immediate assimilation. People in all parts of the world testify to the value of Grape-Nuts.

A Mo. man says: "I have gained ten pounds on Grape-Nuts food. I can truly recommend it to thin people." He had been eating meat, bread, etc., right along, but there was no ten pounds of added flesh until Grape-Nuts food was used.

One curious feature regarding true health food is that its use will reduce the weight of a corpulent person with unhealthy flesh, and will add to the weight of a thin person not properly nourished. There is abundance of evidence to prove this.

Grape-Nuts balances the body in a condition of true health. Scientific selection of food elements makes Grape-Nuts good and valuable. Its delicious flavor and powerful nourishing properties have made friends that in turn have made Grape-Nuts famous. [illegible]

Third, the great volume of unsolicited and grateful testimonials on file at the Pinkham Laboratory at Lynn, Mass., many of which are from time to time being published by special permission, give absolute evidence of the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Mrs. Pinkham's advice.

GOLFER'S CURIOUS DRIVE.

Playing From a Treetop—Ball That Bounded Back to Starting Point.

An odd incident occurred on Saturday during a match at the Golf Club de Paris, near Versailles, says the Pall Mall Gazette. Two players in the open amateur championship were at the fourteenth tee, when one sent his drive up a tree. The ball remained fixed between two branches; a caddie, climbing up, discovered its presence there.

A great consultation arose as to what should be done. The committee was hastily summoned and stood beneath the spreading branches of the tree, much in the fashion in which St. Louis dispensed justice in a primitive France. Evidently the ball was not out of bounds. Finally the judges decreed that either a new ball should be dropped on the tee, counting two, or the ball should be played from the spot. To save the point, the golfer bravely shinned up the tree and played his ball from the embracing fork, making, indeed, quite a good stroke.

Later in the afternoon from the same tee I witnessed another curious incident. The player had driven, and his ball, striking the sand box of the ladies' tee, fifty yards ahead, bounded back to its starting place. The player then drove into the bunker with his second shot, which is also something of a performance.

WHAT'S THE USE?

To Pour in Coffee When It Acts as a Vicious Enemy.

Fasters have gone without food for many days at a time but no one can go without sleep. "For a long time I have not been sleeping well, often lying awake for two or three hours during the night but now I sleep sound every night and wake up refreshed and vigorous," says a Calif. woman.

"Do you know why? It's because I used to drink coffee but I finally cut it out and began using Postum. Twice since then I have drank coffee and both times I passed a sleepless night, and so I am doubly convinced coffee caused the trouble and Postum removed it.

"My brother was in the habit of drinking coffee three times a day. He was troubled with sour stomach and I would often notice him getting soda from the can to relieve the distress in his stomach; lately hardly a day passed without a dose of soda for relief.

"Finally he tried a cup of Postum and liked it so well he gave up coffee and since then has been drinking Postum in its place and says he has not once been troubled with sour stomach."

Even after this lady's experience with coffee her brother did not suspect for a time that coffee was causing his sour stomach, but easily proved it.

Coffee is not suspected in thousands of cases just like this but it's easily proved. A ten day's trial works wonders. "There's a Reason."

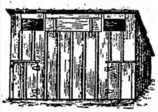
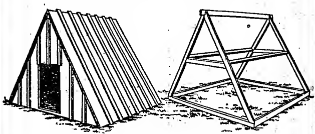
WIGWAM PORTABLE HOG HOUSES ARE THE THING

Animals Thrive Better Under This System of Management Than in Any Other Way.

The wigwam style of movable hog house has its advantages in many ways, as has been demonstrated by the Wisconsin Agricultural college on the experimental farm. The framework is made by using 2 by 4's, 16 feet long, sawed in the middle, thus making the bottom dimensions eight feet square, each side eight feet square, the gable ends being formed by rafters eight feet in length. The front sill is laid flatwise to interfere as little as possible with the young pigs going in and out. The frame rests on short pieces of 2 by 4's nailed across each corner, which can be replaced when necessary. When a floor is desired it should be constructed on stringers and the frame made to rest thereon. The following lumber will build the house without floor: Thirteen pieces No. 1, 1 inch by 12 inches, 16 feet long; 6 pieces 2 inches by 4 inches, 16 feet long; 10 O. G. battens, 16 feet long. Eight boards sawed in the middle make the sides, and the remainder the ends. A small perpendicular slide window is usually made in the rear gable for ventilation. The total cost of material for the house, as shown in the cut, without floor, amounts to practically $11."



Large-Sized Movable Hog House.



Wigwam Movable Hog House.

The second cut shows another style that may be built in two sizes. The larger size is 10 feet long by 8 feet wide, 7 feet and 2 inches high in front, and 3 feet high in the rear.

The smaller one is shown in the third illustration. It is 8 feet long, 6 feet 2 inches high in front and 2 feet high in the rear. The construction of these houses is simple as may be seen in the third illustration. Relative to the detailed construction the bulletin says:

The floor is built, first, with 2 by 4's as stringers, and the frame is held on the floor by blocks at each corner. The large-sized house is provided with two doors, in front, and a temporary movable portion in the middle, so that the cot can easily be adjusted to accommodate two lots of swine at the same time. On a level with the glass windows there is also a drop window, preferably hung on hinges, fastened at the top for ventilation and sunlight.

The lumber required for the large house, 8 feet wide and 10 feet long, including floor, is as follows:

Twenty pieces, 2 inches by 4 inches, 10 feet long, for frame and stringers.

Two pieces, 2 inches by 4 inches, 16 feet long, for frame in ends.

Twenty pieces, 1 inch by 12 inches, 16 feet long, for roof and ends.

Five pieces, 1 inch by 12 inches, 16 feet long (rough), for floor.

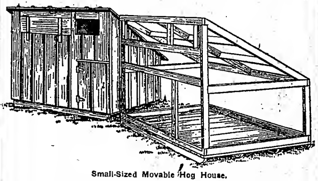
Fifteen O. G. battens, 16 feet long, for sealing cracks between boards.

The material, including the door, hinges and glass, will cost between $16 and $17.

The lumber required for the house 6 feet wide and 8 feet long is as follows:

Twelve pieces, 2 inches by 4 inches, 16 feet long, for frame.

Four pieces, 1 inch by 12 inches, 16 feet long (rough), for floor.



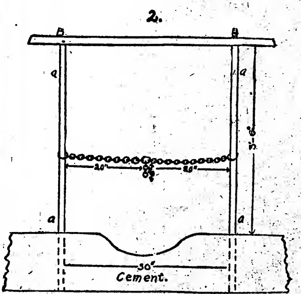
Small-Sized Movable Hog House.

Thirteen pieces, 1 inch by 12 inches 16 feet long, for roof and ends.

Ten O. G. battens, 16 inches long, for sealing cracks between boards.

The total cost of material to build the small cot with floor, door and window complete amounts to about $12.50. For neatness, economy, durability and comfort to the animals, this type of cot is excellent. Where it is desired to keep a number of hogs in one lot the large size is preferable. The small cot will accommodate from three to five mature animals and the large cot from seven to nine.

Placing Manger on Cement Floor



Cement Manger.

When mangers are to be fixed on a cement floor the arrangement shown in the illustration will answer quite well. The upright pieces A A are gas pipes of 1¾ inch diameter, imbedded in the cement manger. B B is a horizontal bar of the same material which steadies the upright bars. When A A are set deeply and firmly enough in the cement, there is seldom any necessity of running them to the ceiling or higher than the rod B B. The chain moves freely up and down on the rods and adjusts itself to the position of the cow, whether she be standing or lying down. This tie has the advantage that it is simple and easily kept clean. If desired the iron pipes may be replaced with 4x4-inch hard wood, but these often give trouble in that they rot off at the point where the wood comes in contact with the cement.

Rash Covered Face and Feet—Would Cry Until Tired Out—Speedy Cure by Cuticura.

"My baby was about nine months old when she had rash on her face and feet. Her feet seemed to irritate her most, especially nights. They would cause her to be broken in her rest, and sometimes she would cry until she was tired out. I had heard of so many cures by the Cuticura Remedies that I thought I would give them a trial. The improvement was noticeable in a few hours, and before I had used one box of the Cuticura Ointment her feet were well and have never troubled her since. I also used it to remove what is known as 'cradle cap' from her head, and it worked like a charm, as it cleansed and healed the scalp at the same time. "Do you drink yourself?"

"That's my business!"—angrily.

Whereupon the unmoved lawyer asked:

"Have you any other business?"

Handsome Catalog.

Professor Sathre, of the Crookston Business College, may well feel proud of the excellent catalog which he has put out this year and which he is sending to prospective students all over the Northwest. It is probably the finest specimen of catalog work ever turned out in the Northwest

The book is not only an advertisement for the school but is a splendid advertisement for Crookston, as it tells of the advantages of the city in a clear, concise manner. Every word uttered by Mr. Sathre's catalog is fact, and this is one of the reasons for the remarkable success of the Crookston Business College since its establishment here in the nineties.

Since last year, Mr. Sathre has added considerable additional room for the accommodation of his constantly growing school and this year will undoubtedly prove the best year which the school has ever experienced.—Crookston Times. adv.

Local Band Left Last Evening To Play Three Day's Engagement.

The Red Lake Falls Concert Band—30 pieces strong—left over last evenings Great Northern for the Twin cities and today, tomorrow and Saturday will furnish music at the big Minnesota state Fair at Hamline this week.

The big band gave an open air concert on Main Street Tuesday evening and nearly every man, woman and child in the city was out to hear them. They also gave a concert at Crookston while enroute last evening and reports from there today are to the effect that they made a decided hit.

The Minnesota state fair this year is said to be the biggest and best ever held by the State Agricul[illegible] society and the opening day the attendance was 94,000,000. The weather is ideal and the fair managers are delighted with the outlook.

Beside the Red Lake Falls band there are four others in attendance and in all modesty THE GAZETTE is forced to predict that the people of of the Twin cities have never had the pleasure of listening to a better amateur band than the one representing Red Lake Falls there today.

BOLD HOLDUP.

Crookston Man Robbed of Gold Watch and $7.

One of the most daring hold-ups that has ever been reported so far in this part of the country occured Thursday between the hours of 10 and 11 when Dan Jerome, a driver in the employ of of Bjoin and Carlson who was returning from this city to Crookston in a rig, was stopped near Perrault station and robbed of a gold watch and $7.

The two robbers were concealed in the underbrush near the road and just as soon as the rig reached the spot where they were they simultaneously sprang from their ambush one catching the reins of the horses and bringing the buggy to a stop, while the other covered Jerome with a revolver. The latter could make no resistance and allowed the robbers to take whatever they wanted.

After the robbers disappeared in the darkness, with their booty, Jerome drove hastily back to Red Lake Falls and informed the authorities of what had taken place. Although a vigilant search was made no clues have been obtained as to the whereabouts of the robbers.

Self Control.

There are times in every one's life when one feels that his self control is slipping away in the most humiliating manner. Some say a cure for nervousness is to hold a long deep breath while counting ten. As a preventive a glass of golden grain belt at bedtime will induce refreshing sleep and rest the tired nerves. If you are a sufferer, try it. Order of your nearest dealer or be supplied by Alex Thompson, Crookston.

GAME SLAUGHTER

Chickens Are Small, And Standing Grain Makes Hunting Difficult

The hunters have returned from the fields and report varied success, but it is the concensus of opinion that the chickens are very small this year and the fact that there is much standing grain interferes greatly with the hunting. The chickens are not dwarfs; in fact they are unusually healthy and strong, but the late spring made a late chicken crop, and this years chickens are in most cases two weeks younger than is generally the case at this time of the year.

Many good [illegible] were brought in however, [illegible] is probable that there [illegible] a great deal of chick[illegible] in Red Lake Falls during the week. Some of the results were as follows:

Dr. Wilkinson, A. L. Reichert, E. G. Buse and P. B. Gaass were up in Middle River country and arrived home with a bag of 60 ducks and 37 chickens.

Peter Beaulieu, Fred and Geo. Cyr, Ernest and Albert Guilmette hunted in Louisville township and bagged 33 chickens.

Blake, Grady, Toupin and Latendresse were south of town. Various reports are told by them.

Noel Delorme, Geo. Hennings and Harry Garceau covered the Tilden country, getting 41 in all,—3 ducks and the rest chickens.

E. A. Nelson, and Billy and Carl Krueger hunted all day in Wylie and brought home six chickens.

Sheriff Nelson, Wander, Swanson and Rassmussen had equally as had luck, getting only seven after a hard days tramp.

Fred Westphal, Carl Buse, and Herbert Findeisen were at Mud lake, north of Thief River and came home with a baggage of 63 ducks.

J. P. Harren and son, Joe, Father Fuvolle and Ernest Gerlach bagged 12 chickens and one duck, Monday. Sunday the two Harrens and Omer Hall with their families bagged eight.

Harry and Ralph Healy and driver were in the vicinity of Goose lake and got three geese, two ducks and three chickens

Fall Term of the Red Lake Falls Public Schools Will Start Monday.

The fall and winter term of the Red Lake Falls public school opens Monday morning and everything is in shape for an auspicious start on the years work.

The teachers of the respective grades will all be on hand to take their posts Monday morning and prospects are bright for good results during the next year.

Allard Branches Out.

Sam Allard the electrical supply man, who is in business at Grand Forks and East Grand Forks, and who spent Friday looking over the situation at Crookston, returned to Grand Forks Saturday, having decided to open a branch house at Crookston.

He has leased the space in the building next to the City Hall, of Will Laird and a shipment of stock from Grand Forks arrived Saturday evening, and got the stock of supplies straightened out Monday. Mr. Allard will take active charge of the branch at Crookston for the next few months and expects to get a good share of the business. He has six men at work the year around at Grand Forks and expects to have a number at Crookston at all times.

Osakis Review: Mr. L. M. Healy, of this village, enjoys the distinction of having four grandsons who will play in a brass band during the State Fair. The boys are all members of the Red Lake Falls band, a musical organization of 27 pieces that has a state wide reputation.

INTERESTING CONTEST.

Secretary Winkjer Sends Circular Letter to Dairymen.

Twenty-five dollars in cash is to be given to the dairyman of the valley who after a long contest proves by actual test that he has the best cow in the valley, i. e., the one that gives the most butter fat in a year of actual test. There are at present four dairymen in the valley who have cows in the contest and the results of these four cows prove that they are running neck and neck in the race and any one of them is liable to win the cash prize when the contest closes Sept. 15th. The four owners are Hans Larson, Clearwater county: Carl Carlson, Erskine: Ole Estenson, Climax; Geo. Henderson, Halstad.

Following is a circular letter which has been sent to every dairyman of the valley, and a copy was sent to THE GAZETTE with the request that it be published. It contains valuable information in regard to the rules of the contest and should be read by every dairyman:

The creamery patron's cow record started last year will close Sept. 15th. Another contest will start on the same day as the other closes and will continue one year. This will give an even chance for alll. The interest in the past contest has been encouraging and much good has come to the contestants in their attempt to get the best out of their cows. Different records on Sept. 15th that will show the winner of the $25 prize.

Frank P. Von Horn, for years a trusted employe of the Jackson, Mich., postoffice, now superintendent of carriers, has been arrested on a charge of pilfering the mails. WOMAN SNATCHED FROM JAWS OF LION

VISITOR TO SUMMER RESORT TORN AND BRUISED BY BLOOD-CRAZED BEAST.

FALLS UNDER RAIN OF LEAD

LION RIDDLED WITH BULLETS WHILE TEARING AT WOMAN'S BODY.

Pittsburg, Pa., Aug. 29.—Torn, bruised and suffering from shock, Mrs. Anna A. Hucke, fifty-five years old, this city, lies at her home in a precarious condition as the result of an attack by a lion at Luna Park, a summer resort in this city, late yesterday. Mrs. Hucke was rescued almost from the jaws of death while she lay on the ground where the animal had thrown her, and while scores of rescuers were firing a fusillade of bullets into the blood-crazed beast who, meanwhile, was biting and clawing at the woman's body.

Springs on Woman.

Without warning the lion appeared from behind one of the buildings, and with a roar sprang for Mrs. Hucke, who was nearest to him. The woman screamed and attracted the attention of the crowd.

W. A. Downing, chief of the park police, who came to the rescue, found the lion tearing away at the woman's clothing, and having drawn his revolver, immediately emptied all the chambers into the beast. Repeatedly Downing reloaded his gun and fired with but little effect. Other rescuers secured Flobert rifles from the shooting galleries and Remington's from the concessionaries and soon a score were pumping lead at the lion.

Riddled With Bullets.

Still standing over the prostrate woman, flashing his teeth and lashing his tail, the lion stood with the ground about him literally plowed up by the hundreds of shots that were fired at him.

Soon with the noise of the firearms and shouts of the woman's rescuers, the lion turned and walked a few feet away and, sinking down upon the ground, he turned over on his back, and with a few kicks and gasps he died. His skin was completely riddled with the small caliber bullets that had been fired at him and took effect.

POSTAL CARD DEALER IN JAIL.

Postoffice Authorities After Purveyors of Obscene Cards.

Philadelphia, Aug. 29.—Charged by United States postal inspectors with the wholesale selling of obscene postal cards, Gustava P. Lang of this city, who traded under the name of The P. C. Novelty company, was arrested to-day and held in bail for trial.

The arrest of Lang is regarded as the most important capture yet made in the crusade against the objectionable cards. The case was brought to the attention of the authorities by a resident of Rome, N. Y., who received a sample series of postals. It is said the nature of the cards led him to complain, and the arrest of Lang followed.

After he had been taken into custody Lang's place of business was searched. The officials claim that in addition to hundreds of the obscene cards, abundant evidence in the way of orders shipped to individuals and firms throughout the country was discovered. The postal authorities say Lang is a wholesaler and has agents in many cities. It is expected several other arrests will be made within a few days.

STATE MUST STAND ASIDE

FEDERAL JUDGE UPHOLDS NORTH CAROLINA RAILWAY INJUNCTION.

Asheville, N. C., Aug. 29.—Judge Pritchard in the United States circuit court, in a long-expected opinion, announced yesterday in the rate case of the Southern railway against the corporation commission and the attorney general of North Carolina, upholding the jurisdiction of his court in the issuance of the recent injunctions against officials during the railroad rate controversy; and declares that the suit is not one against the state within the meaning of the eleventh amendment to the federal constitution.

That amendment holds the judicial power of the United States shall not extend to any suit against a state by citizens of another state.

Can't Take Away Rights.

The decision says that a state legislature cannot so frame an act as to deprive a citizen of a right vouchsafed him by the federal constitution. It does not possess the power "to deprive this court of its jurisdiction, and the sooner those questions are definitely determined the better it will be for all parties concerned."

The decision holds that the corporation commission is still charged with making rates, the only limitation up on their power being "that they shall not make a maximum rate in North Carolina in excess of 2 1-4 cents per mile. The corporation commission and the attorney general are specially charged with the duty of securing the enforcement of section 4 of the passenger rate act, which provides heavy penalties and fines for a failure of railroads and their officials to comply with that act."

Law Silent on Passenger Fare.

The opinion shows that the laws of North Carolina especially provide upon what terms an injunction shall be granted to suspend rates, pending litigation, or involving the confiscatory nature of such rates; that the statutes of North Carolina expressly authorize the course pursued by the courts when freight rates are involved, but do not even require a bond for such injunction when passenger fares are in litigation.

MAILS BOMB TO CORTELYOU.

Package Addressed to Secretary Explodes in Philadelphia.

Philadelphia, Pa., Aug. 29.—The explosion of what appeared to have been a large percussion cap in a package addressed to Secretary of the Treasury Cortelyou created excitement in the Nicetown substation of the Philadelphia postoffice yesterday. The package, which was collected from a box in the northern section of the city, was received by Clerk Roberts, who says it was about four inches long by two inches wide and three-quarters of an inch thick. When Roberts brought his street cancellation die down upon the stamp the package exploded and was torn to pieces. Roberts was unhurt. The pieces of paper were put together and the package was found to have been addressed to Secretary Cortelyou, Washington, D. C., the address having been cut from a newspaper and pasted on the package.

Chief Postal Inspector James B. Cortelyou, a brother of the secretary, is trying to solve the mystery surrounding the explosion, though most of the authorities think the package was mailed as a joke. There was not sufficient explosive matter in it to injure any one. What was in the package aside from the explosive cap the officials will not say.

SOLDIERS GUARD TELEGRAPH.

Strikers Accused of Interfering With Uncle Sam's Business.

Camp Perry, Ohio, Aug. 29.—Striking telegraphers are charged with having interfered with business of the government, and as a result soldiers are patrolling the telegraph lines between Camp Perry and La Carne, a distance of three miles. Any one caught interfering with the line or with the wires at La Carne will be brought to Camp Perry and later turned over to the civil authorities. This action was made necessary because strikers and their sympathizers destroyed communication between Camp Perry and the outside world about 8:30 o'clock Sunday evening, when an operator broke in on the Camp Perry operators and called them "scabs." From that hour there was constant breaking and interruptions until the camp operators were forced to close up at midnight with thousands of words unsent, much of which was government matter from army and national guard officers to their superiors. Yesterday afternoon a detachment of signal corps men sent over the line between Camp Perry and La Carne found that a loop of heavy wire had been tied about the four wires midway on the line with one end grounded, completely destroying the service.

FISH AND HARAHAN IN FIERCE FIGHT

PRESIDENT AND FORMER PRESIDENT OF ILLINOIS CENTRAL IN SCRAP.

EX-PRESIDENT CALLED LIAR

FISH'S DEMAND FOR INVESTIGATION OF ADMINISTRATION STARTS TROUBLE.

New York, Aug. 31. — It became known yesterday that a hand-to-hand fight between Stuyvesant Fish and J. T. Harahan broke up the meeting of the Illinois Central directors Wednesday.

There were hot words between the deposed president of the road and his successor, and when Mr. Harahan shouted out the word "liar" Mr. Fish leaped upon his opponent and clutched him. A struggle followed. Some reports of the affair are that blows were struck and that Mr. Harahan was knocked to the floor by a terrific smash from Mr. Fish's fist.

Whether or not fists were used, it is certain that the two men struggled about the board room until their horrified colleagues stopped the squabble.

Fish Proposes Inquiry.

The trouble between Mr. Fish and his successor at the head of the big railroad system arose when Mr. Fish attempted to get before the board a resolution which in effect demanded a complete investigation of the administration of the company since the elevation of Mr. Harahan to the presidency.

The reading of the resolution was interrupted by motions calling for an immediate adjournment of the meeting and despite the protests of Mr. Fish that he had a right to be heard to the end the motion was declared carried. President Harahan arose with the other directors and prepared to leave the room. Mr. Fish protested that the action was illegal.

Fish is Called a Liar.

"The meeting stands adjourned," retorted President Harahan across the table.

"But it is not adjourned," Fish replied hotly. "You are tools of Harriman and puppets and—"

"You're a liar," said Harahan, springing to his feet.

An instant later the big ex-president had reached across the table, grasped his successor by the arm and shoved him back into his chair. Then the other members of the board rushed in, separating the two men and rushed them out and away for separate routes.

One of the directors who attended the meeting said that no actual blows had been struck, no blood had been spilled and no furniture broken.

Hibbing, Minn., Aug. 31.—Suits for damages aggregating half a million dollars will be instituted against the steel trust and St. Louis county by striking miners who have been shot or imprisoned by special deputy sheriffs.

Armed guards still patrol all trust property, and despite reports to the contrary, the strikers say they are making gains. Two men were shot this week by deputy sheriffs. They are:

Dump boss, name not known; shot through both legs.

Joseph Adamic, Austrian miner, shot through the cheek.

Within a week twenty strikers have been arrested, charged with rioting, but the charges could not be sustained in the local municipal court.

About 1,000 men have been brought here by the steel trust to operate the mines. To balance this, the Western Federation has sent 850 union miners to other fields. The open pit mines are operating with greatly reduced forces, as are the stripping contractors. The underground mines, save those of the independent companies are virtually idle.

Ten thousand strikers are still being cared for through the union's relief fund.

DIVIDING LINE DISPUTE FATAL

DAKOTA COUNTY FARMER SHOT DEAD WHILE AT WORK IN HIS FIELD.

NEIGHBORS ARE UNDER ARREST

Lakeville, Minn., Aug. 29.—Following a dispute with neighbors over the dividing line between their respective farms, Anthony Brennan was shot yesterday morning and died a few hours later. Michael Brennan and his father, M. F. Brennan, were arrested and lodged in the Dakota county jail on a charge of murder.

The Brennan families, who are not related to each other, live three miles from Lakeville. There has been a dispute between the Brennans of long standing over the dividing line between their farms.

Indulged in Heated Words.

Yesterday morning when Anthony Brennan was plowing M. F. Brennan, father of the man who, it is alleged, did the shooting, passed along and asked Anthony why he persisted in cultivating another man's land. Anthony responded that he was plowing his own land. Heated words followed, but Anthony resumed his work.

When Anthony returned on his next round the elder Brennan had been joined by his son, and the dispute was renewed. The argument grew more heated, and at the height of the discussion, Anthony turned to remove the men from his plow, just as he turned to again face his neighbors the younger Brennan, it is alleged, pulled a revolver and fired three times.

Three Shots Take Effect.

One of the shots took effect in Brennan's stomach, another in his leg and the third in his neck. After the shooting Michael Brennan and his father went to Lakeville.

Anthony Brennan's sons heard the shooting and hastened to the scene, where they found their father still alive but unconscious. He was removed to his home where he died a few hours later.

Before he died he rallied sufficiently to make an ante-mortem statement, in which he accused Michael Brennan of doing the shooting.

News of the tragedy spread rapidly and it was not long before the officers had the Brennans under arrest. Both men deny all knowledge of the shooting.
